many of his other works, prove conclusively. He did not reject any truth to be found in any scriptures or in the teachings of any prophet or saint; he revered and accepted truth from all quarters: but at the same time he did not accept any book or teacher as infallible. It should not, however, be forgotten that though he was thus cosmopolitan in his acceptance of truth, there are reasons to think that he believed in what may be called national or racial manifestations or developments of universal theism. His partiality (in no narrow sense) for the ethical portion of Christ's teachings is evident. But it would be wrong to suppose for that reason that he was exclusively or even principally a follower of Jesus. In making this statement we do not solely or chiefly rely on his prose writings in Sanskrit, Arabic, Persian, English or Bengali. His hymns in Bengali, too, in our opinion, afford a correct idea of the faith that lay enshrined in the deepest recesses of his heart. For, poetry springs from a deeper source in the soul than anything that is merely didactic, controversial, doctrinal or philosophical. And from the Raja's Bengali devotional poetry, one cannot but take him to have been a Hindu Theist or a theistic Vedantist.

It is sometimes asked whether Rammohun Roy intended that the society for the worship of one God that he founded should have a social counterpart in a religious community separate from all existing ones, such as the Brahmo Samaj has now become. The question is difficult to answer. But from the little study and thought that we have been able to devote to the subject, it seems to us that at the time when he established the Brahmo Samaj, he meant it to be simply a meeting-ground for people of all sects who wished to unite for divine worship, "a place of public meeting of all sorts and descriptions of people without distinction as shall behave and conduct themselves in an orderly, sober, religious and devout manner for the worship and adoration of the Eternal, Unsearchable and Immutable Being who is the author and preserver of the Universe but not under or by any other name, designation or title peculiarly used for and applied to any particular Being or Beings by any man or set of men whatsoever." Art and philosophy, though each is essentially one all the world over, have yet found various though fitting garb among different peoples according to racial, climatic and other causes. It seems to us, that similarly, the Raja may have thought that Theism, though at bottom one all over the world, has yet found various expression among different races: and though abstract truth is thinkable, yet as it finds actual manifestation in some concrete shape, it is the part of wisdom to allow the abstract universal theism in all countries and among all races to keep its native shape and colour, in which it is embodied, freed, of course, from all that is base and impure, with a broad spirit of toleration for other shapes and colours: or in other words, he may have believed that Theism is one, and Hindu Theism, Semitic Theism, &c., are different forms of the same universal faith; and that the future unity of the human race in religion is not to be realised by all mankind following the creed of this or that sect, but by each nation or race giving up all such erroneous and superstitious beliefs and pernicious customs and lifeless rituals as clash with pure Theism, but in every thing else keeping all that is racy of the soil, all that distinctively belongs to the religious genius of that nation or race, in a spirit of discriminating reverence for its own past and of respect and toleration for others.

Professor Monier Williams speaks of him as the first really earnest investigator in the science of comparative theology, which the world has produced.

Social customs and practices have been and are in all countries more or less connected with the religious beliefs of the people. It is, therefore, only natural that Rammohun Roy's programme of religious reform should lead on to and embrace social reform. In all countries, and specially in India, social reform consists chiefly in doing away with the disabilities or sufferings incident to difference of sex or the accident of birth. Or, in other words, social reformers have chiefly to fight with the spirit of caste and its evils and the subjection of women to the selfish interests and pleasures or supposed interests of the male sex. Rammohun Roy's chief claim to the gratitude of Hindu womanhood is the courageous and devoted part that he played in the movement for the abolition of suttee. He may or may not have been the central figure in that movement, but it must be admitted by all that but for his exertions that inhuman custom would not have been put down by law so soon as it was.

But to prevent the murder of widows was only to create another problem, namely, the amelioration of their condition. It is even now a question as to how we can best better their lot. Many solutions of the problem have been proposed and attempted; their re-marriage, giving them such training as to enable them to lead honourable, useful and independent lives, so changing the Hindu law of inheritance as to make the means of living of Hindu widows less precarious, &c. His "Brief remarks regarding modern encroachments on the ancient rights of females, according to the Hindu Law of inheritance," was intended to attain the last object. That the condition of helpless widows deeply touched his heart appears also from No. VI. of the Sambad Kaumudi, which contained "an appeal to the rich Hindus of Calcutta to constitute a society for the relief of destitute widows, upon the principles of the Civil and Military Widows' Fund, established by order of Government." That he was earnestly in favour of the education of women is quite clear from many passages in his writings, such, for instance, as the following :—

“As to their inferiority in point of understanding, when did you ever afford them a fair opportunity of exhibiting their natural capacity? How then can you accuse them of want of understanding? If, after instruction in knowledge and wisdom, a person cannot comprehend or retain what has been taught him, we may consider him as deficient; but as you keep women generally void of education and acquirements, you cannot, therefore, in justice pronounce on their inferiority. On the contrary, Lilavati, Bhanumati, the wife of the prince of Karnat, and that of Kalidas, are celebrated for their thorough knowledge of all the Sastras: moreover, in the Vrihadaranyak-Opanishad of the Yajur Veda it is clearly stated, that Yajnavalkya imparted divine knowledge of the most difficult nature to his wife Maitreyi, who was able to follow and completely attain it!”

It is true that even with his unbounded enthusiasm in woman's cause and his indefatigable energy he could not take any steps for educating girls, widowed or unmarried; but it may be safely said that had he lived to return home from England and work here for a few years more, his contact with the comparatively enlightened womanhood of the West would certainly have borne fruit in the establishment of educational institutions for Indian girls and women. That Miss Mary Carpenter came out to India to labour for the good of Indian women is due mainly to her contact with the Raja. Regarding the re-marriage of child-widows, it is believed by some that he published a book advocating its introduction but no such production has been discovered among his works. His biographer, Babu Nagendra-nath Chatterji, says :—“We have heard that Rammohun Roy used to express a desire to his friends that the re-marriage of child-widows should become prevalent. When he went to England, a rumour spread everywhere that on coming back home he would introduce the custom of the re-marriage of widows.”

It will appear from a study of his “Brief remarks regarding the ancient rights of females” that he was opposed to polygamy, kulinism and the practical selling of girls in marriage. He showed from the Shastras that second marriages were authorised only under certain circumstances, and observed :—

“Had a Magistrate or other public officer been authorized by the rulers of the empire to receive applications for his sanction to a second marriage during the life of a first wife, and to grant his consent only on such accusations as the foregoing being substantiated, the above Law might have been rendered effectual, and the distress of the female sex in Bengal, and the number of suicides, would have been necessarily very much reduced.”

We have no indication in his works of his views on child-marriage. Perhaps in his days in Bengal, though such marriages must have been customary, their consummation was postponed to a maturer age, thus minimizing the evil to some extent, as is still the case in some provinces of India. But with regard to this item, too, of the social reform programme, one can only speculate as to what he would have done had he lived to come back from England. For, a man, who had such innate chivalry in his nature that he would never take his seat if any woman of what rank so ever remained standing in his presence, could not have failed to observe the evil effects on women of such a custom, at any rate after coming in contact with the comparatively free and healthy womanhood of the West.

That Rammohun Roy had not failed to observe the evil effects of caste will appear from the extract from one of his letters printed on page 929 of this edition. No. VIII of his Sambad Kaumudi, too, prints the plea of a philanthropist [probably himself], who observing the misery caused by prejudices of caste, urges the Hindus not to debar themselves thereby from mechanical pursuits, but to cultivate "such arts as would tend to their comfort, happiness and independence." By crossing the ocean and in other ways, the Raja, to a great extent, broke through the unreasonable and injurious restrictions imposed by caste. Why he did not or could not do so entirely, is not known to a certainty. But from his conduct in other matters, we should hesitate to ascribe to him any motives of cowardice or self-interest. He published with a Bengali translation the first chapter of a Sanskrit work against caste, named Bajrasuchi, by Mrityunjayacharya.

In most things Raja Rammohun Roy was in advance of his age, and rose above the influence of his surroundings. He was the pioneer in many reform movements. But in the matter of total abstinence from intoxicating drinks, his views and practice differed from those of most reformers of the present day. He was a moderate drinker and even quoted some Shastras in favour of the practice. There is also another matter in which he was not in advance of his age. In his "Brief remarks regarding the ancient rights of females," he says that of the three modes of conduct left to the widows of a polygamous man to pursue, the second is "to walk in the paths of unrighteousness for their maintenance and independence." And this he, of course, condemns, and thereby shows himself to be, as we otherwise also know him to have been, an advocate of social purity. Yet it would appear that he found nothing objectionable in entertaining his guests with the nautch and music of dancing girls in his residence. For we find in Fanny Parkes' "Wanderings of a Pilgrim," Vol. I, Chap. IV (Residence in Calcutta, May 1823), the following passage :—

"The other evening we went to a party given by Rammohun Roy, a rich Bengali baboo: the grounds, which are extensive, were well illuminated, and excellent fire-works displayed. In various rooms of the house nâch girls were dancing and singing."

It is well known that Rammohun Roy himself founded and helped others in founding schools. He took a prominent part in the great educational controversy between the "Orientalists" and the "Anglicists", and sided with the latter. But for his opposition the clamour of the former for the exclusive pursuit of Oriental studies would most probably have prevailed. His Letter on English Education to Lord Amherst is a remarkably convincing production.*

"It was owing, perhaps, to this agitation," remarks Babu Jogen-dra Chunder Ghose on this letter, "that the foundation-stone of the building intended for the Sanskrit College was laid in the name of the Hindu College (February, 1824), and the Hindu College was located there together with the Sanskrit College." For the direct and indirect beneficial results of Western education we are indebted to Raja Rammohun Roy as much as to Lord Macaulay, Lord William Bentinck, David Hare, &c.

Rammohun Roy wrote text-books in Bengali on Grammar, Geography, Astronomy and Geometry. He is the father of modern Bengali

* One passage in this letter possesses a special interest of its own. It runs thus :—

"Neither can much improvement arise from such speculations as the following which are the themes suggested by the Vedanta,—in what manner is the soul absorbed in the Deity? What relations does it bear to the Divine Essence? Nor will youths be fitted to be better members of society by the Vedantic doctrines which teach them to believe, that all visible things have no real existence, that as father, brother, &c., have no actual entity, they consequently deserve no real affection, and therefore the sooner we escape from them and leave the world the better."

The missionaries advanced in the Samachar Darpan, the last objection, which Rammohun assailed in his Brahmical Magazine. He further established a Vedanta College. This seeming inconsistency is explained by Miss Collett as follows :—"The teachings of the Vedanta lend themselves to a remarkable diversity of theological interpretation. They are appealed to equally by dualistic and non-dualistic schools of thought. They contain passages which breathe a lofty and ethical Theism; in other places they seem to countenance a Pantheism that is simply Acosmism—the denial of all finite existence; . . . According as the Vedanta is taught with or without a proper selective adjustment of its widely various contents, its value as a subject of instruction may be set high or low. In the ordinary Hindu schools it was taught in false perspective with a discrimination exercised if at all in favour of what was trivial, incorrect, polytheistic. Rammohun therefore opposed with all his might the suggestion that the British Government should perpetuate or encourage this kind of Vedantic instruction. At the same time he saw in the Vedanta rightly handled and "rightly divided" a means for leading his countrymen out of their prevailing superstition and idolatry into a pure and elevated Theism. Their devotion to the Vedantic scriptures was the lever by which Rammohun hoped to lift them into a simpler and nobler faith. Therefore he founded the Vedanta College; and therefore also he controverted the missionaries' wholesale disparagement of the Vedanta. If the missionaries had succeeded in discrediting the Vedanta, they would in Rammohun's eyes have broken down the bridge which enabled men to pass from Hindu Polytheism to Hindu Theism. He thus combated both the conservative Christian who advocated indiscriminate rejection and the conservative Hindu who advocated the indiscriminate retention of Vedantic teaching; and he provided for a discriminating instruction in the ancient system which should have the approval of liberal Hindus and liberal Christians."

literary prose. He taught his people the use of marks of punctuation. There was in his nature a deep vein of genuine poetry, too; as his Bengali hymns show. He was the first to write theistic hymns in Bengali. Pandit Ramagati Nyayaratna, a well-known Hindu historian of the Bengali language and literature, truly observes that "they appear to possess the power of melting even stony hearts, of making the most irreligious devoted to God and of making hearts sunk in wordliness detached from the world." They are prized by theists and idolaters alike. A few of them are in Sanskrit. We believe an English translation of Rammohun's hymns by Babu Mohinimohan Chatterjee, M. A., has been published by the Adi Brahma Samaj of Calcutta.

His Bengali journal, the Sambad Kaumudi, first appeared in 1821. He is the founder of native journalism in India. The Sambad Kaumudi was not exclusively or chiefly a political publication. It, as well as his Persian newspaper, Mirat-ul-Akhbar or Mirror of Intelligence, had an educational purpose, too. Besides politics, subjects of a historical, literary and scientific character were treated of therein.

Lawyers of eminence have declared that the legal writings of the Raja, such as his "Brief Remarks on Ancient Female Rights," "The Rights of Hindus over Ancestral Property according to the Law of Bengal," would do credit to jurists of the highest standing.

To the public Rammohun Roy is best known as a religious and social reformer. To many he is also known as a literateur and educationist. But he is not so well known as a political reformer and agitator. A brief account of his politics may not therefore be out of place here.

Mr. William Adam, a Baptist Missionary, whose association with Raja Rammohun Roy led him to adopt Unitarian opinions, bears the following testimony to his love of liberty:—

"He would be free or not be at all..... Love of freedom was perhaps the strongest passion of his soul,—freedom not of action merely, but of thought.This tenacity of personal independence, this sensitive jealousy of the slightest approach to an encroachment on his mental freedom was accompanied with a very nice perception of the equal rights of others, even of those who differed most widely from him."

It was this love of liberty that was the source of all his political opinions and the mainspring of all his political activity. It made him take interest in and deeply sympathise with all political movements all over the world that had for their object the advancement of popular freedom. Some instances may here be given of Rammohun's cosmopolitan sympathies in the region of politics.

"When the intelligence reached India that the people of Naples after extorting a constitution from their despotic king were crushed back into servitude by the Austrian troops, in obedience to the joint mandate of the crowned heads of Russia, Prussia, Austria, Sardinia, and Naples, Rammohun felt it keenly."

When the news of the establishment of a republic in France reached him in Spain, he gave a public dinner at the Grand Hall. Some months before his departure for England, he was in Calcutta at the latest French Revolution, and, as a great enthusiast that," we are told, "he could think of no other of anything else!" He viewed it as a triumph of liberty, and expressed his admiration. On his voyage to England he landed at the Cape for nearly two hours, and two. "Returning on board he met with a most unexpected and gangway ladder had not been properly secured, and he got a fearful fall, from which he was lame for eight weeks, and the illness, which indeed never fully recovered. But he finally suffering would at present his mental ardour. Two French frigates, under the command of the flag, the glorious tri-colour, were lying in Table Bay, and from the deck was, he would insist on visiting them. The sight of these colours seemed to kindle his enthusiasm, and to render him insensible to pain." During the days of the Reform Bill agitation in England and considered the struggle between the reformers and anti-reformers as a struggle between liberty and oppression throughout the world : between justice and injustice, and between right and wrong. He publicly avowed that in the event of the Reform Bill being defeated, he would renounce his connection with England. His Persian weekly, the Mirat, did not, however, favourably consider the national aspirations of Greece. Muhammadan sympathy with the Turks may have been to some extent responsible for this attitude to Greece.

We now pass on to the Raja's Indian political opinions. Our politics are sure to be tinged by our attitude towards British rule in India. It is therefore necessary to know what the Raja thought of British rule in India in his day. In his autobiography he writes :—

".....I proceeded on my travels, and passed through different countries, chiefly within, but some beyond, the bounds of Hindoostan, with a feeling of great aversion to the establishment of the British Power in India. When I had reached the age of twenty, my father recalled me, and restored me to his favour ; after which I first saw and began to associate with Europeans, and soon after made myself tolerably acquainted with their laws and form of government. Finding them generally more intelligent, more steady and moderate in their conduct, I gave up my prejudice against them, and became inclined in their favour, feeling persuaded that their rule, though a foreign yoke, would lead more speedily and surely to the amelioration of the native inhabitants ;....."

He concluded his " Final Appeal to the Christian Public "

"by offering up thanks to the supreme Disposer of the events of this universe, for having unexpectedly delivered this country from the long-continued tyranny of its former Rulers, and placed it under the government of the English,—a nation who not only are blessed with the enjoyment of civil and political liberty, but also interest themselves in promoting liberty and social happiness, as well as free inquiry into literary and religious subjects, among those nations to which their influence extends."

But Rammohun gave to Muhammadan rule also its due meed of praise by mentioning in what respects it was superior to British rule. He wrote in his " Appeal to the King in Council " against the Press Regulation :—

"Your Majesty is aware, that under their former Mohammadan Rulers, the natives of this country enjoyed every political privilege in common with Mussulmans, being eligible to the highest offices in the State, entrusted with the command of armies and the government of provinces and often chosen as advisers to their Prince, without disqualification or degrading distinction on account of their religion or the place of their birth. They used to receive free grants of land exempted from any payments of revenue, and besides the highest salaries allowed under the Government, they enjoyed free of charge large tracts of country attached to certain offices of trust and dignity, while natives of learning and talent were rewarded with numerous situations of honour and emolument. Although under the British Rule, the natives of India, have entirely lost this political consequence.....", &c.

In a letter to Mr. Buckingham, dated August 11, 1821, he wrote :—

"I am afraid I must be under the necessity of denying myself the pleasure of your society this evening; more especially as my mind is depressed by the late news from Europe.....From the late unhappy news I am obliged to conclude that I shall not live to see liberty universally restored to the nations of Europe, and Asiatic nations, especially those that are European colonies, possessed of a greater degree of the same blessing than what they now enjoy.

"Under these circumstances I consider the cause of the Neapolitans as my own, and their enemies as ours. Enemies to liberty and friends of despotism have never been, and never will be, ultimately successful."

"These noble words," says Miss Collett, "reveal how profoundly Rammohun felt with the late Russel Lowell that "In the gain or loss of one race all the rest have equal claim"; and that

"Wherever wrong is done

To the humblest and the weakest, 'neath the all-beholding Sun,
That wrong is also done to us."

Rammohun's Persian weekly Mirat-al-Akhbar contained an article on "Ireland, the causes of its distress and discontent". In this he dwelt on the evils of absenteeism and the injustice of maintaining Protestant clergymen out of revenues wrung from the Roman Catholic inhabitants of Ireland. He said :—

How admirable is the observation of Saadi (on whom be mercy !)

"Do not say that these rapacious ministers are the well-wishers of his Majesty ;
For in proportion as they augment the revenue of the State, they diminish his popularity ;

O statesman, apply the revenue of the king towards the comfort of the people ;
then during their lives they will be loyal to him."

When the news of the establishment of constitutional Government in Spain reached India, he gave a public dinner at the Town Hall. Some months before his departure for England, news reached Calcutta of the latest French Revolution, and, "so great was his enthusiasm that," we are told, "he could think and talk of nothing else!" He viewed it as a triumph of liberty and rejoiced accordingly. On his voyage to England he landed at the Cape for only an hour or two. "Returning on board he met with a nasty accident. The gangway ladder had not been properly secured, and he got a serious fall, from which he was lame for eighteen months afterwards and indeed never finally recovered. Raja Ram Mohun Roy believed that a free Press is one of the best safeguards of liberty. This conviction found expression in his petitions against the Press Regulation (1) to the Legislative Council and (2) to the King in Council. The Press ordinance passed thereafter no one should publish a newspaper or other periodical without having obtained a license from the Legislative Council in Council, signed by the Chief Secretary. The ordinance enacted by the Supreme Court "may be regarded as the Accomplishment of Indian History. Alike in dictum and in argument, it forms a noble landmark in the progress of English culture in the East."

This Memorial proving fruitless, Hammerstein and his associates appealed to the King in council. Says Mian: "He is

"The appeal is one of the noblest pieces of English literature, which, in its stately periods and not less stately thoughts, recall the eloquence of the great orators of a century ago. In its language and style too even more than in its grand vindication of liberty, it invokes against the arbitrary exercise of British power the principles and traditions which are distinctive of British history."

This Memorial, too, proved unavailing. The Privy Council refused to comply with the petition.

A new Jury Act came into operation in the beginning of 1877. On August 18th, 1878, Rommohun wrote to Mr. J. Crawford and submitted to him petitions against the Act for presentation to both Houses of Parliament, signed by Hindus and Mohammedans. He thus concisely stated the grounds of grievance :—

"In his famous Jury Bill, Mr. Wynn, the late President of the Board of Control, has by introducing religious distinctions into the judicial system of this country, not only afforded just grounds for dissatisfaction among the Natives in general, but has excited much alarm in the breast of every one conversant with political principles. Any Natives, either Hindu or Mohamedan, are rendered by this Bill subject to judicial trial by Christians, either European or Native, while Christians, including Native converts, are exempted from the degradation of being tried either by a Hindu or Mussulman juror, however high he may stand in the estimation of society. This Bill also denies both to Hindus and Mohamedans the honor of a seat in the Grand Jury even in the trial of fellow Hindus or Mussulmans. This is the sum total of Mr. Wynn's late Jury Bill, of which we bitterly complain."

Rammohun went on to suggest a possibility "which is by no means so remote now as when he wrote":—

"Supposing that 100 years hence the Native character becomes elevated from constant intercourse with Europeans and the acquirement of general and political knowledge as well as of modern arts and sciences, is it possible that they will not have the spirit as well as the inclination to resist effectually any unjust and oppressive measures serving to degrade them in the scale of society? It should not be lost sight of that the position of India is very different from that of Ireland, to any quarter of which an English fleet may suddenly convey a body of troops that may force its way in the requisite direction and succeed in suppressing every effort of a refractory spirit. Were India to share one-fourth of the knowledge and energy of that country, she would prove from her remote situation, her riches and her vast population, either useful and profitable as a willing province, an ally of the British empire, or troublesome and annoying as a determined enemy."

"In common with those who seem partial to the British rule from the expectation of future benefits arising out of the connection, I necessarily feel extremely grieved in often witnessing Acts and Regulations passed by Government without consulting or seeming to understand the feelings of its Indian subjects and without considering that this people have had for more than half a century the advantage of being ruled by and associated with an enlightened nation, advocates of liberty and promoters of knowledge."

The letter quoted above is remarkable for the far-sighted glance into the future which it reveals. Here in germ is to be found the national aspiration which is now breaking forth into demands for a greater measure of self-government than the people at present enjoy. Rammohun's English biographer observes that "The prospect of an educated India, of an India approximating to European standards of culture, seems to have never been long absent from Rammohun's mind; and he did, however vaguely, claim in advance for his countrymen the political rights which progress in civilization inevitably involves. Here again Rammohun stands forth as the tribune and prophet of New India."

The Select Committee of the House of Commons which was appointed in February, 1831, and reappointed in June to consider the renewal of the Company's Charter invited him to appear before it.

Rammohur declined this request but tendered his evidence in the form of successive "Communications to the Board of Control." The first of these dealt with Revenue. The Raja appears here as the champion of the rack-rented ryot. While the Zemindars or landholders had been greatly benefited by the Permanent Settlement of 1793, while their wealth and the wealth of the community had generally increased, the poor cultivator was no better off. The remedy he asked for was in the first place the prohibition of any further rise in rent, and secondly—rents being now so exorbitantly high as to leave the ryot in a state of extreme misery,—a reduction in the revenue demanded from the Zemindar so as to ensure a reduction in the ryot's rent. The decrease in revenue he would meet by increasing taxes upon luxuries or by employing as Collectors low-salaried Indians instead of high-salaried Europeans. It may here be incidentally observed that nearly three-quarters of a century ago, when education was in a backward condition, Raja Rammohun Roy considered Indians fit for the duties of Collectors. He also considered them well qualified to discharge all judicial duties.

He approved of the settlement in India of a few model landlords from England, but was careful to stipulate that they should not be drawn from the lower classes. This is not the place to criticize the Raja's views on this subject; but it seems open to grave doubt whether a European landed aristocracy for India would have been on the whole beneficial to the people of this country. He concluded with an earnest appeal "to any and every authority to devise some mode of alleviating the present miseries of the agricultural peasantry of India."

It admits of no doubt that the condition of the proprietors of land has improved under the system of permanent assessment. But the Government seems at present to believe that that system has resulted in loss of revenue to the State. It is, therefore, important to quote the Raja's opinion on this subject.

"The amount of assessment fixed on the lands of these provinces at the time of the Permanent Settlement (1793), was as high as had ever been assessed, and in many instances higher than had ever before been realized by the exertions of any government, Mohamedan or British. Therefore the Government sacrificed nothing in concluding that settlement. If it had not been formed, the landholders (Zemindars) would always have taken care to prevent the revenue from increasing by not bringing the waste lands into cultivation, and by collusive arrangements to elude further demands; while the state of the cultivators would not have been at all better than it is now. However, if the Government had taken the whole estates of the country into its own hands, as in the ceded and conquered provinces and the Madras Presidency, then, by allowing the landholders only ten per cent. on the rents (Malikanah), and securing all the rest to the Government, it might no doubt have increased the revenue for a short time. But the whole of the landlords in the country would then have been reduced to the same wretched condition as they are at present in in the ceded and conquered Provinces of the Bengal Presidency or rather annihilated, as in many parts of the Madras territory ; and the whole population reduced to the same level of poverty. At the same time, the temporary increase of revenue to Government under its own immediate management would also have soon fallen off, through the misconduct and negligence of the revenue officers, as shown by innumerable instances in which the estates were kept khas, i.e., under the immediate management of Government."

"Besides, Government appropriates to itself an enormous duty on the transit and exportation of the produce of the soil, which has, since the period of the Perpetual Settlement, increased to a great amount from the exertions of the proprietors in extending and improving cultivation, under the assurance that no demand of an increase of revenue would be made upon them on account of the progressive productiveness of their estates."

The Raja contrasts the effects of the permanent and periodical systems of assessment in two statements.

"By a comparative view of the revenues of Bengal, Behar and Orissa, from the period of the Perpetual Settlement, it appears that, in the thirty-five years, from 1792-93 to 1827-28, there was a total increase on the whole amount of the Revenue of above 100 per cent (101·71), and that this increase has been steady and progressive up to the present time ;....."

"By a comparative view of the revenue of the old British territory in Madras, it appears that during the same period of thirty-five years (i.e., from 1793 to 1828) there was an increase of only about 40 per cent., (40·15) on the total amount of the whole revenue. That the increase during the first 17 years was 43 $\frac{2}{3}$ per cent ; that in the next 8 years the increase was only about 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent ; and that in the last 18 years there has been a decrease of 2·15 per cent."

In an appendix he urged the Imperial utility of the policy of fixing a maximum rent to be paid by each cultivator, "that their rents already raised to a ruinous extent, might not be subject to further increase." His advocacy of this policy is so statesmanlike that no apology is needed for quoting his views on the subject. To recognise the indefeasible rights of the ryots in the soil would make them loyal to the power that secured them and "ready to rise in defence of it, as a militia or in any other shape that might be required ; so as to secure the British rule in a foreign and remote empire, alike from internal intrigue and from external aggression, without the necessity of keeping on foot an immense standing army at an enormous cost. This consideration is of great importance in respect to the natives of the upper and western provinces, who are distinguished by their superior bravery, and form the greater part of the British Indian army. If this race of men, who are by no means deficient in feelings of personal honor and regard for family respectability, were assured that their rights in the soil were indefeasible so long as the British power should endure, they would from gratitude and self-interest at all time be ready to devote their lives and property in its defence.

"The saving that might be effected by this liberal and generous policy, through the substituting of a militia force for a great part of the present standing army, would be much greater than any gain that could be realized by any system of increasing land revenue that human ingenuity could devise. Then appeared the line of the Persian sage (Saadi):

*Be on friendly terms with thy subjects and treat them as thy enemies;
For to an upright prince his people are an aid.*

"Be on friendly terms with thy subjects and treat them as thy enemies; for to an upright prince his people are an aid."

While on the subject of Land Settlement we may recall that in 1828 by Regulation III of that year, the revenue collector in each district was authorised to dispossess the holders of tax-free lands. The collector should be of opinion, after such enquiry as might be deemed necessary, that the title of the proprietor was not valid. The regulation enacted that "such decision of the collector shall be final, and shall have the effect of a decree"; also that "it shall be the duty of the collector to transmit his proceedings to the Board of Revenue, which may or may not be filled or not," and by article 10 of the regulation it was directed immediately to carry into effect his decision by attaching and assessing the lands." This regulation produced great alarm and distrust amongst the natives of Bengal, Behar and Oude, many of whom petitioned against the principle of one party who appealed to the land, dispossessing an actual possessor at his own discretion. This agitation was led, though unsuccessfully, by Rameshchandra Roy. Reg. III of 1828 is still in force.

Among the principal measures advocated in the Raja's Questions and Answers on the Judicial System of India were the substitution of English for Persian as the official language of the courts and the appointment of native assessors in the civil courts. As for the jury, of which the Panchayat system was the indigenous parallel, separation of the offices of judge and revenue commissioners, separation of the offices of judge and magistrate, codification of the criminal law and also of the law of India, and consultation with the local magnates before enacting laws. The last reform proposed contains the germs of representative legislative bodies.

Students of Indian economics are familiar with the fact that every year nearly 45 crores of rupees of India's capital is drained off to foreign parts without any hope of return. This drain of wealth did not escape the eyes of Raja Rammohun Roy. In his "Hereditary System of India" he says that as a large sum of money is every year annually drawn from India by Europeans retiring from it with the fortunes realized there, a system which would encourage Europeans of capital to become permanent settlers with their families, would necessarily greatly improve the resources of the country. He pro-pared several tables to prove this drain. The following two paragraphs are appended to these tables :—

"By the evidence of Messrs. Lloyd and Melville (the former the Accountant-General, and the latter the Auditor-General of the East India Company), recorded in the Minutes of evidence taken before the Select Committee of the House of Lords, 23rd February, 1830, it appears that the proportion of the Indian revenues expended in England on the territorial account amounts, on an average, to £3,000,000 annually. It includes the expenses at the Board of Control and India House, pay, absentee allowances and pensions to Civil and Military officers in Europe for services in India, with interest of money realized there, &c., &c., besides £453,588 for territorial stores consigned to India.

"In a letter of the Court of Directors to the Government of Bengal, dated the 20th of June, 1810, and quoted in the work "On Colonial Policy as applicable to the Government of India," by a very able servant of the company, holding a responsible situation in Bengal, the Directors state that "it is no extravagant assertion to advance, that the annual remittances to London on account of individuals, have been at the rate of nearly £2,000,000 per annum for a series of years past." (p. 70.) From these and other authentic documents the author calculates the amount of capital, or "the aggregate of tribute, public and private, so withdrawn from India from 1765 to 1820, at £100,000,000." (p. 65.)

It has already been incidentally shown that Raja Rammohun Roy was in favour of the settlement in India of European capitalists under certain conditions. Among the advantages likely in his opinion to arise from such settlement was the improvement of the condition of the native inhabitants by European landlords showing them superior methods of cultivation. That this was not altogether a vain expectation appears from some observations in Mr. N. G. Mukerji's Hand-book of Indian Agriculture. Says Mr. Mukerji :

"Indeed, Indian agriculture has been actually vastly improved by our contact with the West. European planters have been the means of introducing important innovations. In the most out-of-the way places of India we find European planters carrying on agricultural experiments and improvements imperceptibly and noiselessly."

This naturally leads one to a consideration of the Raja's Remarks on Settlement in India by Europeans. It is a paper of rare personal and national importance. But as it raises problems of great magnitude, we refrain from dealing with it here. Suffice it to say that this his final literary deliverance holds up to the people of India the prospect of India having English as its lingua franca, India socially and in other respects westernized to some extent, India possibly independent and India the Enlightener of Asia.

Progressive political views imply confidence in the capacity of a people for continuous improvement. Raja Rammohun Roy believed that the people of India "have the same capability of improvement as any other civilized people." He did not believe that Asiatics were naturally an inferior race. In the course of one of his numerous religious controversies "A Christian" having indulged in a tirade about persons being "degraded by Asiatic effeminacy," the Raja reminded him that almost all the ancient prophets and patriarchs venerated by Christians, nay, even Jesus Christ himself, were Asiatics.

On a perusal of the foregoing pages it will be found that with the exception of the agitation that has been going on for sometime past for the industrial regeneration of the country, Rammohun Roy laid the foundation of all the principal modern movements for the elevation of our people. Probably, as India is mainly an agricultural country and as in his days the pressure on land had not become abnormal owing to the indigenous industries not having disappeared then to the extent to which they have now declined, the industrial problem did not then press for solution with the same urgency as now. Nevertheless we find that the bearing of the system of caste on industrial prosperity did not escape the keen eyes of Rammohun: as No. VIII of his Sambad Kanumudi printed the "plea of a philanthropist, who observing the misery caused by prejudices of caste, urges the Hindus not to debar themselves thereby from mechanical pursuits, but to cultivate such arts as would tend to their comfort, happiness and independence."

We conclude this introduction with the following estimate of his personality by his biographer, the late Miss Sophia Dobson Collett, who, though an English woman and a trinitarian Christian, seems on the whole to have understood the meaning of his life pretty accurately:—

"Rammohun stands in history as the living bridge over which India marches from her unmeasured past to her incalculable future. He was the arch which spanned the gulf that yawned between ancient caste and modern humanity, between superstition and science, between despotism and democracy, between immobile custom and a conservative progress, between a bewildering polytheism and a pure, if vague, Theism. He was the mediator of his people, harmonizing in his own person, often by means of his own solitary sufferings, the conflicting tendencies of immemorial tradition and of inevitable enlightenment."

"He embodies the new spirit which arises from the compulsory mixture of races and faiths and civilizations,—he embodies its freedom of enquiry, its thirst for science, its large human sympathy, its pure and sifted ethics, along with its reverent but not uncritical regard for the past, and prudent, even timid, disinclination towards revolt. But in the life of Rammohun we see what we hope yet to have shown us in the progress of India, that the secret of the whole movement is religious. Amid all his wanderings Rammohun was saved by his faith. * * * He was a genuine outgrowth of the old Hindu stock; in a soil watered by new influences, and in an atmosphere charged with unwonted forcing power, but still a true scion of the old stock. The Rajah was no merely occidentalized oriental, no Hindu polished into the doubtful semblance of a European. Just as little was he, if we may use the term without offence, a spiritual Eurasian. If we follow the right line of his development we shall find that he leads the way from the orientalism of the past, not to, but through Western culture, towards a civilization which is neither Western nor Eastern, but something vastly larger and nobler than both. He preserves continuity throughout, by virtue of his religion, which again supplied the motive force of his progressive movement. The power that connected and restrained, as well as widened and impelled, was religion.

"Rammohun thus presents a most instructive and inspiring study for the New India of which he is the type and pioneer. He offers to the new democracy of the West a scarcely less valuable index of what our greatest Eastern dependency may yet become under the imperial sway of the British commonalty. There can be little doubt that, whatever future the destinies may have in store for India, that future will be largely shaped by the life and work of Rammohun Roy. And not the future of India alone. We stand on the eve of an unprecedented intermingling of East and West. The European and Asiatic streams of human development, which have often tinged each other before, are now approaching a confluence which bids fair to form the one ocean-river of the collective progress of mankind. In the presence of that greater Eastern question,—with its infinite ramifications, industrial, political, moral and religious,—the international problems of the passing hour, even the gravest of them, seem dwarfed into parochial pettiness. The nearing dawn of these unmeasured possibilities only throws into clearer prominence the figure of the man whose life-story we have told. He was, if not the prophetic type, at least the precursive hint, of the change that is to come."

Hinge plate of steel

In pursuance of my vindication, I have to the best of my abilities translated this hitherto unknown work, as well as an abridgment thereof, into the Hindoostanee and Bengalee languages, and distributed them, free of cost, among my own countrymen, as widely as circumstances have possibly allowed. The present is an endeavour to render an abridgment of the same into English, by which I expect to prove to my European friends, that the superstitious practices which deform the Hindoo religion have nothing to do with the pure spirit of its dictates!

I have observed, that both in their writings and conversation, many Europeans feel a wish to palliate and soften the features of Hindoo idolatry; and are inclined to inculcate, that all objects of worship are considered by their votaries as emblematical representations of the Supreme Divinity! If this were indeed the case, I might perhaps be led into some examination of the subject: but the truth is, the Hindoos of the present day have no such views of the subject, but firmly believe in the real existence of innumerable gods and goddesses, who possess, in their own departments, full and independent power; and to propitiate them, and not the true God, are temples erected and ceremonies performed. There can be no doubt, however, and it is my whole design to prove, that every rite has its derivation from the allegorical adoration of the true Deity; but at the present day all this is forgotten, and among many it is even heresy to mention it!

I hope it will not be presumed that I intend to establish the preference of my faith over that of other men. The result of controversy on such a subject, however multiplied, must be ever unsatisfactory; for the reasoning faculty, which leads men to certainty in things within its reach, produces no effect on questions beyond its comprehension. I do no more than assert, that if correct reasoning and the dictates of common sense induce the belief of a wise, uncreated Being, who is the Supporter and Ruler of the boundless universe, we should also consider him the most powerful and supreme Existence,—far surpassing our powers of comprehension or description. And, although men of uncultivated minds, and even some learned individuals, (but in this one point blinded by prejudice,) readily choose, as the object of their adoration, anything which they can always see, and which they pretend to feel; the absurdity of such conduct is not thereby in the least degree diminished.

My constant reflections on the inconvenient, or rather injurious rites introduced by the peculiar practice of Hindoo idolatry which, more than any other pagan worship, destroys the texture of society, together with compassion for my countrymen, have compelled me to use every possible effort to awaken them from their dream of error: and by making them acquainted with their scriptures, enable them to contemplate with true devotion the unity and omnipresence of Nature's God.

By taking the path which conscience and sincerity direct, I, born a Brahman, have exposed myself to the complainings and reproaches even of some of my relations, whose prejudices are strong, and whose temporal advantage depends upon the present system. But these, however accumulated, I can tranquilly bear, trusting that a day will arrive when my humble endeavours will be viewed with justice—perhaps acknowledged with gratitude. At any rate, whatever men may say, I cannot be deprived of this consolation: my motives are acceptable to that Being who beholds in secret and compensates openly!

sight of a pot we conclude the existence of its artificer. The Veda, in like manner, declares the Supreme Being thus: "He from whom the universal world proceeds, who is the Lord of the Universe, and whose work is the universe, is the Supreme Being."^{*}

The Veda is not supposed to be an eternal Being, though sometimes dignified with such an epithet; because its being created by the Supreme Being is declared in the same Veda thus: "All the texts and parts of the Veda were created:" and also in the third text of the Vedanta, God is declared to be the cause of all the Vedas.

The void Space is not conceived to be the independent cause of the world, notwithstanding the following declaration of the Veda, "The world proceeds from the void space;"[†] for the Veda again declares, "By the Supreme Being the void space was produced." And the Vedanta[‡] says: "As the Supreme Being is evidently declared in the Veda to be the cause of the void Space, Air, and Fire, neither of them can be supposed to be the independent cause of the universe."

Neither is Air allowed to be the Lord of the Universe, although the Veda says in one instance, "In air every existing creature is absorbed;" for the Veda again affirms, that "Breath, the intellectual power, all the internal and external senses, the void Space, Air, Light, Water, and the extensive Earth, proceeded from the Supreme Being!" The Vedanta[§] also says: "God is meant by the following text of the Veda, as a Being more extensive than all the extension of Space;" viz. "That breath is greater than the extension of Space in all directions," as it occurs in the Veda, after the discourse concerning common breath is concluded.

Light, of whatever description, is not inferred to be the Lord of the Universe, from the following assertion of the Veda: "The pure Light of all lights is the Lord of all creatures;" for the Veda again declares, that "The sun and all others imitate God, and borrow their light from him;" and the same declaration is found in the Vedanta.[¶]

Neither can Nature be construed by the following texts of the Veda, to be the independent cause of the world: viz., Man "having known that Nature which is an eternal being, without a beginning or an end, is delivered from the grasp of death," and "Nature operates repeatedly affirms, that "All the Vedas praise a Being that is not 'of the Supreme Being'." By allowing the diversity of figures to be 'of the Supreme Being, the following positive affirmations of the Veda relative to the unity of God, become false and absurd. "There is no second," "There is none but the Supreme Being possessed of universal knowledge," "He who is without any figure, and beyond the limit of description, is the Supreme Being," "Appellations and figures of all kinds are innovations." And from the authority of many other texts it is evident that any being that bears figure, and is subject to description, cannot be the eternal, independent cause of the universe.

The Vedas not only call the celestial representations deities, but also in many instances give the divine epithet to the animal, bird, space, quadruped animals, slaves, and flowers, etc. "The Supreme Being is a quadruped animal in one place, and in another he is a bird of glory. The mind is the Supreme Being, it is to be interpreted." "God is the letter 'ka' as well as 'kha,' and that is in the shape of slaves and that of flowers." The Veda has allegorically represented God in the figure of the Universe, viz. "The sun, the moon, the earth, and the moon are his 'two eyes,' &c." And also the Veda calls God the void space of the heart, and declares him to be smaller than the grain of paddy and barley; but from the foregoing quotations manifestly any of the celestial gods, nor any existing creature, should be considered the Lord of the Universe, because the third chapter of the Vedanta explains the reason for these secondary appellations thus: "By these appellations of the Veda, which denote the diffusive spirit of the Supreme Being equally over all creatures by means of extension, his omnipresence is established." So the Veda says, "All that exists is indeed God," i.e., nothing bears true existence excepting God, "and whatever we smell or taste is God," i.e., the existence of whatever thing that appears to us, relies on the existence of God. It is indisputably evident that none of these metaphorical representations, which arise from the elevated style in which all the Vedas are written, were designed to be viewed in any other light than mere allegory. Should individuals be acknowledged to be separate deities, there would be a necessity for acknowledging many independent creators of "authorities of the Veda;" that is, "Every one, on having lost all self-consideration in consequence of being united with divine reflection, may speak as assuming to be the Supreme Being; like Vamadeva (a celebrated Brahman) who, in consequence of such self-forgetfulness, declared himself to have created the sun, and Manu, the next person to Brahma." It is therefore optional with every one of the celestial gods, as well as with every individual, to consider himself as God, under this state of self-forgetfulness and unity with the Divine reflection, as the Veda says, "You are that true Being" (when you lose all self-consideration), and "O God, I am nothing but you." The sacred commentators have made the same observation, viz., "I am nothing but true Being, and am pure Understanding, full of eternal happiness, and am by nature free from worldly effects." But in consequence of this reflection, none of them can be acknowledged to be the cause of the universe or the object of adoration.

God is the efficient cause of the universe, as a potter is of earthen pots; and he is also the material cause of it, the same as the earth is the material cause of the different earthen pots, or as a rope, at an inadvertent view taken for a snake, is the material cause of the conceived existence of the snake, which appears to be true by the support of the real existence of the rope. So says the Vedanta,† "God is the efficient cause of the Universe, as well as the material cause thereof (as a spider of its web)," as the Veda has positively declared, "That from a knowledge of God alone, a knowledge of every existing thing proceeds." Also the Veda compares the knowledge respecting the Supreme Being to a knowledge of the earth, and the knowledge respecting the different species existing in the universe to the knowledge of earthen pots, which declaration and comparison prove the unity between the Supreme Being and the universe; and by the following declarations of the Veda, viz., "The Supreme Being has by his sole intention created the Universe," it is evident that God is the wilful agent of all that can have existence.

As the Veda says that the Supreme Being intended (at the time of creation) to extend himself, it is evident that the Supreme Being is the origin of all matter, and its various appearances; as the reflection of the sun's meridian rays on sandy plains is the cause of the resemblance of an extended sea. The Veda says, that "All figures and their appellations are mere inventions, and that the Supreme Being "and of men in general, that person who understands and feels that the Almighty Being, will be absorbed in him, and that he has concluded that the celestial gods and mankind have an equal share in divine worship; and besides it is proved from the full meaning of the Veda, that any man who adores the Supreme Being, is adored by all the celestial gods, viz. "All the celestial gods, including him, who applies his mind to the Supreme Being."

The Veda now illustrates the mode in which we should worship the Supreme Being, viz. "To God we should approach, to him we should hear, of him we should think, and to him we should attempt to approximate."† The Vedanta also illustrates the subject thus: "The three latter directions in the above quotation are conducive to the first, viz. 'Approaching to God.' These three are in reality included in the first (as the directions for following him in the worship of fire), for we cannot approach to that without hearing and thinking of him, nor without attempting to make our approximation; and the last, viz. attempting to approximate, is not completed until we have approached him. By hearing of God is meant hearing his declarations, which establish his unity, and by thinking of him is meant thinking of the contents of his law, and by attempting to approximate to him is meant attempting to give our minds to that true Being on which the diffusive existence of the universe rests, in order that by means of the constant practice of these attempts we may approach to him. The Vedanta states, ‡ that "Constant practice of devotion is necessary, it being represented by the Veda, and adds that "We should adore God till we approach to him, and then not forsake his adoration, such authority being found in the Veda."

The Vedanta shows that moral principle is a part of the adoration of God, viz., "A command over our passions and senses the celestial senses of the body and good acts, are directed by the Veda to be indispensable in the mind's approximation to God, they should therefore be strictly taken care of, and attended to, both personally, and subsequently to such approximation to the Supreme Being, i. e. we should not indulge our evil propensities, but should endeavor to have entire control over them. Reliance on, and self-surrender to, the only true Being, with an aversion to worldly possessions, are included in the good acts above alluded to. The adoration of God

"adoration of the Supreme Being, acquired the true knowledge respecting the Deity."* The Vedanta again more clearly states that, "It is equally found in the Veda that some people, though they had their entire faith in God alone, yet performed both the worship of God and the ceremonies prescribed by the Veda; and that some others neglected them, and merely worshipped God."† The following texts of the Veda fully explain the subject, viz., "Janaka (one of the noted devotees) had performed Yajna (or the adoration of the celestial gods through fire) with the gift of a considerable sum of money, as a fee to the holy Brahmins, and many learned true believers never worshipped fire, nor any celestial god through fire."

Notwithstanding it is optional with those who have their faith in the only God, to attend to the prescribed ceremonies or to neglect them entirely, the Vedanta prefers the former to the latter, because the Veda says that attendance to the religious ceremonies conduces to the attainment of the Supreme Being.

Although the Veda says, "That he who has true faith in the omnipresent Supreme Being may eat all that exists,"‡ i.e., is not bound to enquire what is his food, or who prepares it, nevertheless the Vedanta limits that authority thus: "The above-mentioned authority of the Veda for eating all sorts of food should only be observed at the time of distress, because it is found in the Veda, that Chakrayana (a celebrated Brahmin) ate the meat cooked by the elephant-keepers during a famine."§ It is concluded, that he acted according to the above stated authority of the Veda, only at the time of distress.

Devotion to the Supreme Being is not limited to any holy place or sacred country, as the Vedanta says, "In any place wherein the mind feels itself undisturbed, men should worship God; because no specific authority for the choice of any particular place of worship is found in the Veda,"|| which declares, "In any place which renders the mind easy, man should adore God."

It is of no consequence to those who have true belief in God whether they die while the sun is in the north or south of the equator, as the Vedanta declares that "Any one who has faith in the only God, dying even when the sun may be south of the equator, ¶ his

¶ It is believed by the Brahmins, that any one who dies while the sun is south of the equator, cannot enjoy eternal beatitude.

"soul shall proceed from the body, through Sushumna (a vein which, as the Brahmins suppose, passes through the navel up to the brain), and approaches to the Supreme Being.*" The Veda also positively asserts that "He who in life was devoted to the Supreme Being, shall (after death) be absorbed in him, and again be neither liable to birth nor death, reduction nor augmentation."

The Veda begins and concludes with the three peculiar and mysterious epithets of God, viz, first, OM; second, TAT; third, SAT. The first of these signifies, "That Being which preserves, destroys and creates." The second implies "That only Being which is neither male or female." The third announces "The true Being." These collective terms simply affirm, that ONE UNKNOWN, TRUE BEING IS THE CREATOR, PRESERVER, AND DESTROYER OF THE UNIVERSE!

INTRODUCTION.

DURING the intervals between my controversial engagements with idolaters as well as with advocates of idolatry, I translated several of the ten Upanishads, of which the Vedanta or principal part of the Vedas consists, and of which the Sariraka-Mimansa, commonly called the Vedanta-Darsana, composed by the celebrated Vyasa, is explanatory; I have now taken the opportunity of further leisure to publish a translation of the Mundaka-Upanishad. An attentive perusal of this as well as of the remaining books of the Vedanta will, I trust, convince every unprejudiced mind, that they, with great consistency, inculcate the unity of God; instructing men, at the same time, in the pure mode of adoring him in spirit. It will also appear evident that the Vedas, although they tolerate idolatry as the last provision for those who are totally incapable of raising their minds to the contemplation of the invisible God of nature, yet repeatedly urge the relinquishment of the rites of idol-worship, and the adoption of a purer system of religion, on the express ground that the observance of idolatrous rites can never be productive of eternal beatitude. These are left to be practised by such persons only as, notwithstanding the constant teaching of spiritual guides, cannot be brought to see perspicuously the majesty of God through the works of nature.

The public will, I hope, be assured that nothing but the natural inclination of the ignorant towards the worship of objects resembling their own nature, and to the external forms of rites palpable to their grosser senses, joined to the self-interested motives of their pretended guides, has rendered the generality of the Hindoo community (in defiance of their sacred books) devoted to idol-worship,—the source of prejudice and superstition and of the total destruction of moral principle, as countenancing criminal intercourse,* suicide,† female murder,‡ and human sacrifice. Should my labours prove in any degree the means of diminishing the extent of those evils, I shall ever deem myself most amply rewarded.

* Vide Defence of Hindoo Theism.

‡ Vide Treatise on Widow-burning.

From his omniscience the Supreme Being resolves to create the Universe. Then nature, the apparent cause of the world, is produced by him. From her the prior operating sensitive particle of the world, styled Brahma, the source of the faculties, proceeds. From the faculties the five elements are produced; thence spring the seven divisions of the world, whereon ceremonial rites, with their consequences, are brought forth. By him who knows all things, collectively and distinctly, whose knowledge and will are the only means of all his actions, Brahma, name, and form, and all that vegetates are produced.

End of the first Section of the 1st Mundakam.

Those rites,* the prescription of which wise men, such as Vasishtha, and others found in the Vedas, are truly the means of producing good consequences. They have been performed in various manners by three sects among Brahmans, namely, Adhvaryu, or those who are well versed in the Yajur-veda; Udgata, or the sect who know thoroughly the Sama-veda; and Hota, those Brahmans that have a perfect knowledge of the Rig-veda. You all continue to perform them, as long as you feel a desire to enjoy gratifications attainable from them. This practice of performing rites is the way which leads you to the benefits you expect to derive from your works.

Fire being augmented when its flame waves, the observer of rites shall offer oblations to deities in the middle of the waving flame.

If observance of the sacred fire be not attended with the rites required to be performed on the days of new and full moon, and during the four months of the rains, and in the autumn and spring; and be also not attended with hospitality and due regard to time or the worship of Vaiswadeva, and be fulfilled without regard to prescribed forms, it will deprive the worshipper of the enjoyments which he might otherwise expect in his seven future mansions.

Kali, Karali, Manojava, Sulohita, Sudhumravarna, Sphulingini, Viswaruchi, are the seven names of the seven waving points of the flame.

He who offers oblations at the prescribed time in those illuminating and waving points of fire, is carried by the oblations so offered through the rays of the Sun to the Heaven where Indra, prince of the celestial gods, reigns. The illuminating oblations, while carrying the observer of rites through the rays of the Sun, invite him to heaven, saying, "Come in! come in!" and entertaining him with pleasing conversation, and treating him with veneration, say to him, "This is the summit of the heavens, the fruit of your good works."

* In the beginning of this section, the author treats of the subject of the inferior knowledge; and in the conclusion he introduces that of the superior doctrine, which he continues throughout the whole Upanishad.

The eighteen members of rites and sacrifices, void of the true knowledge, are infirm and perishable. Those ignorant persons who consider them as the source of real bliss, shall, after the enjoyment of future gratification, undergo transmigrations. Those fools who, immersed in ignorance, that is, the foolish practice of rites, consider themselves to be wise and learned, wander about, repeatedly subjecting themselves to birth, disease, death and other pains, like blind men when guided by a blind man.

Engaged in various manners of rites and sacrifices, the ignorant are sure of obtaining their objects: but as the observers of such rites, from their excessive desire of fruition, remain destitute of a knowledge of God, they, afflicted with sorrows, descend to this world after the time of their celestial gratification is expired. Those complete fools believe, that the rites prescribed by the Vedas in performing sacrifices, and those laid down by the Smritis at the digging of wells and other pious liberal actions, are the most beneficial, and have no idea that a knowledge of, and faith in God, are the only true sources of bliss. They, after death, having enjoyed the consequence of such rites on the summit of heaven, transmigrate in the human form, or in that of inferior animals, or of plants.

Mendicants and hermits, who residing in forests, live upon alms, as well as householders possessed of a portion of wisdom, practising religious austerities, the worship of Brahma and others, and exercising a control over the senses, freed from sins, ascend through the northern path* to the highest part of heaven, where the immortal Brahma, who is coeval with the world, assumes his supremacy.

Having taken into serious consideration the perishable nature of all objects within the world, which are acquirable from human works, a Brahman shall cease to desire them; reflecting within himself, that nothing which is obtained through perishable means can be expected to be eternal : hence what use of rites? He then, with a view to acquire a knowledge of superior learning, shall proceed, with a load of wood in his hand, to a spiritual teacher who is versed in the doctrines of the Vedas and has firm faith in God. The wise teacher shall properly instruct his pupil so devoted to him, freed from the importunities of external senses, and possessed of tranquillity of mind, in the knowledge through which he may know the eternal Supreme Being.

* According to the Hindu theologians, there are two roads that lead to distinct heavens, one northern, the other southern. The former is the path to the habitation of Brahma and the superior gods, and the latter to the heaven of Indra and the other inferior deities.

End of the first Mundakam.

He, the subject of the superior knowledge, alone is true. As from a blazing fire thousands of sparks of the same nature proceed, so from the eternal Supreme Being (O beloved pupil) various souls come forth, and again they return into him. He is immortal and without form or figure, omnipresent, pervading external and internal objects, unborn, without breath or individual mind, pure and superior to eminently exalted nature.

From him the first sensitive particle, or the seed of the universe, individual intellect, all the senses and their objects, also vacuum, air, light, water, and the earth which contains all things, proceed.

Heaven is his head, and the sun and moon are his eyes ; space is his ears, the celebrated Vedas are his speech ; air is his breath, the world is his intellect, and the earth is his feet ; for he is the soul of the whole universe.

By him the sky, which is illuminated by the sun, is produced ; clouds, which have their origin from the effects of the moon, accumulating them in the sky, bring forth vegetables in the earth ; man imparts the essence drawn from these vegetables, to woman ; then through the combination of such physical causes, numerous offspring come forth from the omnipresent Supreme Being.

From him all the texts of the Vedas, consisting of verses, musical compositions, and prose, proceed ; in like manner by him are produced Diksha or certain preliminary ceremonies, and sacrifices, without sacrificial posts or with them ; fees lastly offered in sacrifices, time, and the principal person who institutes the performance of sacrifices and defrays their expenses ; as well as future mansions, where the moon effects purification and where the sun shines. By him gods of several descriptions, all celestial beings subordinate to those gods, mankind, animals, birds, both breath and peditum, wheat and barley, austerity, conviction, truth, duties of ascetics, and rules for conducting human life, were created. From him seven individual senses within the head proceed, as well as their seven respective inclinations towards their objects, their seven organs (two eyes, two ears, the two passages of nose and mouth), in which those senses are situated in every living creature, and which never cease to act except at the time of sleep.

From him, oceans and all mountains proceed, and various rivers flow: all vegetables, tastes, (consisting of sweet, salt, pungent, bitter, sour, and astringent) united with which the visible elementary substance encloses the corpuscle situate in the heart.* The Supreme existence is himself all—rites as well as their rewards. He therefore is the Supreme and Immortal. He who knows him (O beloved pupil) as residing in the hearts of all animate beings, disentangles the knot of ignorance in this world.

God, as being resplendent and most proximate to all creatures, is styled the operator in the heart; he is great and all-sustaining; for on him rest all existences, such as those that move, those that breathe, those that twinkle, and those that do not. Such is God. You all contemplate him as the support of all objects, visible and invisible, the chief end of human pursuit. He surpasses all human understanding, and is the most pre-eminent. He, who irradiates the sun and other bodies, who is smaller than an atom, larger than the world, and in whom is the abode of all the divisions of the universe, and of all their inhabitants, is the eternal God, the origin of breath, speech, and intellect, as well as of all the senses. He, the origin of all the senses, the true and unchangeable Supreme Being, should be meditated upon; and do thou (O beloved pupil) apply constantly thy mind to him. Seizing the bow found in the Upanishads, the strongest of weapons, man shall draw the arrow (of the soul), sharpened by the constant application of mind to God. Do thou (O pupil),

* This corpuscle is supposed to be constituted of all the various elements that enter into the composition of the animal frame. Within it the soul has its residence, and acting upon it, operates through its medium in the whole system. To this corpuscle the soul remains attached through all changes of being, until finally absorbed into the Supreme Intelligence.

being in the same practice, withdrawing all the senses from worldly objects, through the mind directed towards the Supreme Being, hit the mark which is the eternal God. The word Om, signifying God, is represented as the bow, the soul as the arrow, and the Supreme Being as its aim, which a man of steady mind should hit: he then shall be united to God as the arrow to its mark. In God, heaven, earth, and space reside, and also intellect, with breath and all the senses. Do you strive to know solely the ONE Supreme Being, and forsake all other discourse; because this (a true knowledge respecting God) is the only way to eternal beatitude. The veins of the body are inserted into the heart, like the radius of a wheel into its nave. There the Supreme Being, as the origin of the notion of individuality, and of its various circumstances, resides; Him, through the help of Om, you will contemplate. Blessed be ye in crossing over the ocean of dark ignorance to absorption into God. He who knows the universe collectively, distinctively, whose majesty is fully evident in the world, operates within the space of the heart, his luminous abode.

He is perceptible only by intellect; and removes the breath and corpuscle, in which the soul resides, from one substance to another: supporting intellectual faculties, he is seated in the heart. Wise men acquire a knowledge of him, who shines eternal, and the source of all happiness, through the pure knowledge conveyed to them by the Vedas and by spiritual fathers. God, who is All-in-all, being known to man as the origin of intellect and self-consciousness, every desire of the mind ceases, all doubts are removed, and the effects of the good or evil actions committed, now or in preceding shapes, are totally annihilated. The Supreme Being, free from stain, devoid of figure or form, and entirely pure, the light of all lights, resides in the heart, his resplendently excellent seat: those discriminating men, who know him as the origin of intellect and of self-consciousness, are possessed of the real notion of God. Neither the sun nor the moon, nor yet the stars, can throw light on God: even the illuminating lightning cannot throw light upon him, much less can limited fire give him light: but they all imitate him, and all borrow their light from him. God alone is immaterial: he extends before, behind, to the right, to the left, beneath and above. He is the Supreme, and All-in-all.

End of the Second Mundakam.

Two birds (meaning God and the soul) cohabitant and co-essential, reside unitedly in one tree, which is the body. One of them (the soul) consumes the variously tasted fruits of its actions; but the other (God), without partaking of them, witnesses all events.

The soul so pressed down in the body, being deluded with ignorance, grieves at its own insufficiency; but when it perceives its cohabitant, the adorable Lord of the Universe,* the origin of itself, and his glory, it feels relieved from grief and infatuation. When a wise man perceives the resplendent God, the Creator and Lord of the Universe and the omnipresent prime Cause, he then, abandoning the consequences of good and evil works, becomes perfect, and obtains entire absorption. A wise man knowing God as perspicuously residing in all creatures, forsakes all idea of duality; being convinced that there is only one real Existence, which is God. He then directs all his senses towards God alone, the origin of self-consciousness, and on him exclusively he places his love, abstracting at the same time his mind from all worldly objects by constantly applying it to God: the person so devoted is reckoned the most perfect among the votaries of the Deity. Through strict veracity, the uniform direction of mind and senses, and through notions acquired from spiritual teachers, as well as by abstinence from sexual indulgence, man should approach God, who full of splendour and perfection, works in the heart; and to whom only the votaries freed from passion and desire can approximate.

He who practises veracity prospers, and not he who speaks untruths: the way to eternal beatitude is open to him who without mission speaketh truth. This is that way through which the saints, extricated from all desires, proceed to the Supreme Existence, the consequence of the observance of truth. He is great and incomprehensible by the senses, and consequently his nature is beyond human conception. He, though more subtle than vacuum itself, shines in various ways.—From those who do not know him, he is at a greater distance than the limits of space, and to those who acquire knowledge of him, he is most proximate; and while residing in intimate creatures, he is perceived obscurely by those who apply their thoughts to him. He is not perceptible by vision, nor is he describable by means of speech: neither can he be the object of any of the other organs of sense; nor can he be conceived by the help of austerities or religious rites: but a person whose mind is purified by the light of true knowledge, through incessant contemplation, perceives him, the most pure God. Such is the invisible Supreme Being: he should be observed in the heart, wherein breath, consisting of five species, rests. The mind being perfectly freed from impurity, God, who spreads over the mind and all the senses, imparts a knowledge of himself to the heart.

* The difference between God, the intellectual principle, and the soul, the individual effect, subsists as long as the idea of self-individuality is retained; like the distinction between finite and infinite space, which ceases as soon as the idea of particular figure is gone away.

A pious votary of God obtains whatever division of the world and whatever desirable object he may wish to acquire for himself or for another: therefore any one, who is desirous of honour and advantage should revere him.

End of the 1st section of the 3rd Mundakam.

Those wise men who, abandoning all desires, revere the devotee who has acquired a knowledge of the supreme exaltation of God, on whom the whole universe rests, and who is perfect and illuminates everywhere, will never be subjected to further birth.

He who, contemplating the various effects of objects visible or invisible, feels a desire to obtain them, shall be born again with those feelings: but the man satisfied with a knowledge of and faith in God, blessed by a total destruction of ignorance, forsakes all such desires even during his life.

A knowledge of God, the prime object, is not acquirable from study of the Vedas, nor through retentive memory, nor yet by continual hearing of spiritual instruction: but he who seeks to obtain a knowledge of God is gifted with it, God rendering himself conspicuous to him.

No man deficient in faith or discretion can obtain a knowledge of God; nor can even he who possesses wisdom mingled with the desire of fruition, gain it: but the soul of a wise man who, through firm belief, prudence, and pure understanding, not biassed by worldly desire, seeks for knowledge, will be absorbed into God.

The saints who, wise and firm, were satisfied solely with a knowledge of God, assured of the soul's divine origin, exempt from passion, and possessed of tranquillity of mind, having found God the omnipresent everywhere, have after death been absorbed into him; even

INTRODUCTION.

SINCE my publication of the abridgment of the Vedanta, containing an exposition of all the Vedas as given by the great VYASA, I have, for the purpose of illustrating and confirming the view that he has taken of them, translated into Bengalee the principal chapters of the Vedas as being of unquestionable authority amongst all Hindoos. This work will, I trust, by explaining to my countrymen the real spirit of the Hindoo Scriptures, which is but the declaration of the unity of God, tend in a great degree to correct the erroneous conceptions, which have prevailed with regard to the doctrines they inculcate. It will also, I hope, tend to discriminate those parts of the Vedas which are to be interpreted in an allegorical sense, and consequently to correct those exceptionable practices, which not only deprive Hindoos in general of the common comforts* of society, but also lead them frequently to self-destruction,† or to the sacrifice‡ of the lives of their friends and relations.

It is with no ordinary feeling of satisfaction that I have already seen many respectable persons of my countrymen, to the great disappointment of their interested spiritual guides, rise superior to their original prejudices, and enquire into the truths of religion. As many European gentlemen, especially those who interest themselves in the improvement of their fellow-creatures, may be gratified with a view of the doctrines of the original work, it appeared to me that I might best contribute to that gratification, by translating a few chapters of the Veda into the English language, which I have accordingly done, and now submit them to their candid judgment. Such benevolent people will, perhaps, rise from a perusal of them with the conviction, that in the most ancient times the inhabitants of this part of the globe (at least the more intelligent class) were not unacquainted with metaphysical subjects; that allegorical language or description was very frequently employed to represent the attributes of the Creator, which were sometimes designated as independent existences; and that, however suitable this method might be to the refined understandings of men of learning, it had the most mischievous effect when literature and philosophy decayed, producing all those absurdities and idolatrous notions which have checked, or rather destroyed, every mark of reason, and darkened every beam of understanding.

* A Hindoo of caste can only eat once between sunrise and sunset—cannot eat dressed victuals in a boat or ship—nor clothed—nor in a tavern—nor any food that has been touched by a person of a different caste—nor, if interrupted while eating, can he resume his meal.

† As at Prayaga, Ganga Sagar, and under the wheels of the car of Jagannath.

‡ As, for instance, persons whose recovery from sickness is supposed to be doubtful, are carried to die on the banks of the Ganges. This is practised by the Hindoos of Bengal only, the cruelty of which affects even Hindoos of Behar, Hahabad, and all the upper provinces.

The Veda from which all Hindoo literature is derived, is, in the opinion of the Hindoos, an inspired work, coeval with the existence of the world. It is divided into four parts, viz., Rik, Yajus, Sama and Atharva; these are again divided into several branches, and these last are sub-divided into chapters. It is the general characteristic of each Veda, that the primary chapters of each branch treat of astronomy, medicine, arms, and other arts and sciences. They also exhibit allegorical representations of the attributes* of the Supreme Being, by means of earthly objects, animate or inanimate, whose shapes or properties are analogous to the nature of those attributes, and pointing out the modes of their worship immediately or through the medium of fire. In the subsequent chapters, the unity of the Supreme Being as the sole ruler of the universe is plainly inculcated, and the mode of worshipping him particularly directed. The doctrine of a plurality of gods and goddesses laid down in the preceding chapters is not only controverted, but reasons assigned for its introduction; for instance, that the worship of the sun and fire, together with the whole allegorical system, were only inculcated for the sake of those whose limited understandings rendered them incapable of comprehending and adoring the invisible Supreme Being, so that such persons might not remain in a brutified state, destitute of all religious principle. Should this explanation given by the Veda itself, as well as by its celebrated commentator Vyasa, not be allowed to reconcile those passages which are seemingly at variance with each other, as those that declare the unity of the invisible Supreme Being, with others which describe a plurality of independent visible gods, the whole work must, I am afraid, not only be stripped of its authority, but be looked upon as altogether unintelligible.

* It is my intention to give, with the blessing of God, in my next publication, an account of the relation betwixt those attributes and the allegorical representations used to denote them.

I have often lamented that, in our general researches into theological truth, we are subjected to the conflict of many obstacles. When we look to the traditions of ancient nations, we often find them at variance with each other ; and when, discouraged by this circumstance, we appeal to reason as a surer guide, we soon find how incompetent it is, alone, to conduct us to the object of our pursuit. We often find that, instead of facilitating our endeavours or clearing up our perplexities, it only serves to generate a universal doubt, incompatible with principles on which our comfort and happiness mainly depend. The best method perhaps is, neither to give ourselves up exclusively to the guidance of the one or the other ; but by a proper use of the lights furnished by both, endeavour to improve our intellectual and moral faculties, relying on the goodness of the Almighty Power, which alone enables us to attain that which we earnestly and diligently seek for.

1st. Who is he [asks a pupil of his spiritual father,] under whose sole will the intellectual power makes its approach to different objects! Who is he under whose authority breath, the primitive power in the body, makes its operation? Who is he by whose direction language is regularly pronounced? And who is that immaterial being that applies vision and hearing to their respective objects?

2nd. He, [answers the spiritual parent,] who is the sense of the sense of hearing; the intellect of the intellect; the essential cause of language; the breath of breath; the sense of the sense of vision;—this is the Being concerning whom you would enquire. Learned men, having relinquished the notion of self-independence and self-consideration from knowing the Supreme Understanding to be the sole source of power, enjoy everlasting beatitude after their departure from this world.

3rd. Hence no vision can approach him, no language can describe him, no intellectual power can compass or determine him. We know nothing of how the Supreme Being should be explained: he is beyond all that is within the reach of comprehension, and also beyond nature, which is above conception. Our ancient spiritual parents have thus explained him to us.

4th. He alone, who has never been described by language, and who directs language to its meaning, is the Supreme Being, and not any specified thing which men worship; know THOU this.

5th. He alone, whom understanding cannot comprehend, and who, as said by learned men, knows the real nature of understanding, is the Supreme Being, and not any specified thing which men worship; know THOU this.

6th. He alone, whom no one can conceive by vision, and by whose superintendence every one perceives the objects of vision, is the Supreme Being, and not any specified thing which men worship: know THOU this.

7th. He alone, whom no one can hear through the sense of hearing, and who knows the real nature of the sense of hearing, is the Supreme Being, and not any specified thing which men worship : know THOU this.

8th. He alone, whom no one can perceive through the sense of smelling, and who applies the sense of smelling to its objects, is the Supreme Being, and not any specified thing which men worship : know THOU this.

9th. If you [continues the spiritual parent], from what I have stated, suppose and say that "I know the Supreme Being thoroughly," you in truth know very little of the Omnipresent Being; and any conception of that Being which you limit to your powers of sense, is not only deficient, but also his description which you extend to the bodies of the celestial gods, is also imperfect;* you consequently should enquire into the true knowledge of the Supreme Being. To this the pupil replies : "I perceive that at this moment I begin to know God."

10th. "Not that I suppose," continues he, "that I know God thoroughly, nor do I suppose that I do not know him at all : as, among us, he who knows the meaning of the above-stated assertion, is possessed of the knowledge respecting God, viz., 'that I neither know him thoroughly, nor am entirely ignorant of him.'"

11th. [The spiritual father again resumes:] He who believes that he cannot comprehend God, does know him ; and he who believes that he can comprehend God, does not know him : as men of perfect understanding acknowledge him to be beyond comprehension ; and men of imperfect understanding suppose him to be within the reach of their simplest perception.

12th. The notion of the sensibility of bodily organs, which are composed of insensible particles, leads to the notion of God ; which notion alone is accurate, and tends to everlasting happiness. Man gains, by self-exertion, the power of acquiring knowledge respecting God, and through the same acquisition he acquires eternal beatitude.

13th. Whatever person has, according to the above stated doctrine, known God, is really happy, and whoever has not known him is subjected to great misery. Learned men, having reflected on the Spirit of God extending over all moveable as well as immoveable creatures, after their departure from this world are absorbed into the Supreme Being.

* The sum of the notion concerning the Supreme Being given in the Vedanta, is, that he is "the Soul of the universe, and bears the same relation to all material extensions that a human soul does to the individual body with which it is connected".

In a battle between the celestial gods and the demons, God obtained victory over the latter, in favour of the former (or properly speaking, God enabled the former to defeat the latter); but, upon this victory being gained, the celestial gods acquired their respective dignities, and supposed that this victory and glory were entirely owing to themselves. The Omnipresent Being, having known their boast, appeared to them with an appearance beyond description.*

They could not know what adorable appearance it was: they, consequently, said to fire, or properly speaking the god of fire: "Discover thou, O god of fire, what adorable appearance this is." His reply was, "I shall." He proceeded fast to that adorable appearance, which asked him, "who art thou?" He then answered, "I am fire, and 'I am the origin of the Veda,' that is, I am a well-known personage." The Supreme Omnipotence, upon being thus replied to, asked him again, "What power is in so celebrated a person as thou art?" He replied, "I can burn to ashes all that exists in the world." The Supreme Being then having laid a straw before him, said to him, "Canst thou burn this straw?" The god of fire approached the straw, but could not burn it, though he exerted all his power. He then unsuccessfully retired and told the others, "I have been unable to discover what adorable appearance this is." Now they all said to wind (or properly to the god of wind), "Discover thou, O god of wind, what adorable appearance this is." His reply was, "I shall." He proceeded fast to that adorable appearance, which asked him, "Who art thou?" He then answered, "I am wind, and I pervade unlimited space;" that is, I am a well-known personage. The Supreme Being, upon being thus replied to, asked him again, "What power is in so celebrated a person as thou art?" He replied, "I can uphold all that exists in the world." The Supreme Being then, having laid a straw before him, said to him, "Canst thou uphold this straw?" The god of wind approached the straw, but could not hold it up, though he exerted all his power. He then unsuccessfully retired and told the others, "I have been unable to discover what adorable appearance this is." Now they all said to the god of atmosphere, "Discover thou, O revered god of atmosphere, what adorable appearance this is." His reply was, "I shall." He proceeded fast to that adorable appearance, which vanished from his view. He met at the same spot a woman, the goddess of instruction, arrayed in golden robes in the shape of the most beautiful Uma.* He asked, "What was that adorable appearance?" She replied, "It was the Supreme Being owing to whose victory you are all advanced to exaltation." The god of atmosphere, from her instruction, knew that it was the Supreme Being that had appeared to them. He at first communicated that information to the gods of fire and of wind. As the gods of fire, wind, and atmosphere had approached to the adorable appearance, and had perceived it, as also they had known, prior to the others, that it was indeed God that appeared to them, they seemed to be superior to the other gods. As the god of atmosphere had approached to the adorable appearance, and perceived it, and also as he knew, prior to every one of them, that it was God that appeared to them, he seemed not only superior to every other god, but also, for that reason, exalted above the gods of fire and wind.

The foregoing is a divine figurative representation of the Supreme Being; meaning that in one instant he shines at once over all the universe like the illumination of lightning; and in another, that he disappears as quick as the twinkling of an eye. Again, it is represented of the Supreme Being, that pure mind conceives that it approaches to him as nearly as possible: Through the same pure mind the pious man thinks of him, and consequently application of the mind to him is repeatedly used. That God, who alone in reality has no resemblance, and to whom the mind cannot approach, is adorable by all living creatures; he is therefore called "adorable;" he should, according to the prescribed manner, be worshipped. All creatures revere the person who knows God in the manner thus described. The pupil now says, "Tell me, O spiritual father, the Upanishad or the principal part of the Veda." The spiritual father makes this answer, "I have told you the principal part of the Veda which relates to God alone, and, indeed, told you the Upanishad, of which, austere devotion, control over the senses, performance of religious rites, and the remaining parts of the Veda, as well as those sciences that are derived from the Vedas, are only the feet; and whose altar and support is truth." He who understands it as thus described, having relieved himself from sin, acquires eternal and unchangeable beatitude.

PREFACE.

IN pursuance of my attempt to render a translation of the complete Vedanta, or the principal parts of the Vedas into the current languages of this country, I had some time ago the satisfaction of publishing a translation of the Katha-Upanishad of the Yajur-veda into Bengalee; and of distributing copies of it as widely as my circumstances would allow, for the purpose of diffusing Hindoo scriptural knowledge among the adherents of that religion. The present publication is intended to assist the European community in forming their opinion respecting Hindoo Theology, rather from the matter found in their doctrinal scriptures, than from the Puranas, moral tales, or any other modern works, or from the superstitious rites and habits daily encouraged and fostered by their self-interested leaders.

This work not only treats polytheism with contempt and disdain, but inculcates invariably the unity of God as the intellectual Principle, the sole Origin of individual intellect, entirely distinct from matter and its affections; and teaches also the mode of directing the mind to him.

A great body of my countrymen, possessed of good understandings, and not much fettered with prejudices, being perfectly satisfied with the truth of the doctrines contained in this and in other works, already laid by me before them, and of the gross errors of the puerile system of idol-worship which they were led to follow, have altered their religious conduct in a manner becoming the dignity of human beings; while the advocates of idolatry and their misguided followers, over whose opinions prejudice and obstinacy prevail more than good sense and judgment, prefer custom and fashion to the authorities of their scriptures, and therefore continue, under the form of religious devotion, to practise a system which destroys, to the utmost degree, the natural texture of society, and prescribes crimes of the most heinous nature, which even the most savage nations would blush to commit, unless compelled by the most urgent necessity.* I am, however, not without a sanguine hope that, through Divine

* Vide the latter end of the Introduction to the Mundaka Upanishad.

Providence and human exertions, they will sooner or later avail themselves of that true system of religion which leads its observers to knowledge and love of God, and to a friendly inclination towards their fellow-creatures, impressing their hearts at the same time with humility and charity, accompanied by independence of mind and pure sincerity. Contrary to the code of idolatry, this system defines sins as evil thoughts proceeding from the heart, quite unconnected with observances as to diet and other matters of form. At any rate, it seems to me that I cannot better employ my time than in an endeavour to illustrate and maintain truth, and to render service to my fellow-labourers, confiding in the mercy of that Being to whom the motives of our actions and secrets of our hearts are well-known.

KATHA UPANISHAD.

DESIROUS of future fruition, Bajasravasa performed the sacrifice Visvajit, at which he distributed all his property. He had a son named Nachiketa. Old and infirm cows being brought by the father as fees to be given to attending priests, the youth was seized with compassion, reflecting within himself, "He who gives to attending priests such cows as are no longer able to drink water or to eat grass, and are incapable of giving further milk or of producing young, is carried to that mansion where there is no felicity whatever."

He then said to his father, "To whom, O father, wilt thou consign me over in lieu of these cows?" and repeated the same question a second and a third time.

Enraged with his presumption, the father replied to him, "I shall give thee to Yama" (the god of death). The youth then said to himself, "In the discharge of my duties as a son, I hold a foremost place among many sons or pupils of the first class, and I am not inferior to any of the sons or pupils of the second class: whether my father had a previous engagement with Yama, which he will now perform by surrendering me to him, or made use of such an expression through anger, I know not." The youth finding his father afflicted with sorrow, said, "Remember the meritorious conduct of our ancient forefathers, and observe the virtuous acts of contemporary good men. Life is too short to gain advantages by means of falsehood or breach of promise; as man like a plant is easily destroyed, and again like it puts forth its form. Do you therefore surrender me to Yama according to your promise." The youth Nachiketa, by permission of his father, went to the habitation of Yama. After he had remained there for three days without food or refreshment, Yama returned to his dwelling, and was thus addressed by his family: "A Brahman entering a house as a guest is like fire; good householders, therefore, extinguish his anger by offering him water, a seat, and food. Do thou, O Yama, present him with water. A man deficient in wisdom suffers his hopes, his sanguine expectation of success, his improvement from associating with good men, the benefit

"which he might derive from his affable conversation, and the fruits "produced by performance of prescribed sacrifices, and also by digging
 "of wells and other pious liberal actions, as well as all his sons and "cattle, to be destroyed, should a Brahman happen to remain in his "house without food."

*Yama being thus admonished by his family, approached Nachiketa and said to him; "As thou, O Brahman, hast lived in my house, a "revered guest, for the space of three days and nights without food,
 "I offer thee reverence in atonement, so that bliss may attend me;
 "and do thou ask three favours of me as a recompense for what thou "hast suffered while dwelling in my house during these days past."
 Nachiketa then made this as his first request, saying, "Let, O Yama!
 "my father Gotama's apprehension of my death be removed, his "tranquillity of mind be restored, his anger against me extinguished,
 "and let him recognise me on my return, after having been set free
 "by thee. This is the first of three favours which I ask of thee."*

Yama then replied:

*"Thy father, styled Auddalaki and Aruni, shall have the same
 "regard for you as before; so that, being assured of thy existence,
 "he shall, through my power, repose the remaining nights of his life
 "free from sorrow, after having seen thee released from the grasp of "death." Nachiketa then made his second request. "In heaven,
 "where there is no fear whatsoever, and where even thou, O Yama!
 "canst not always exercise thy authority, and where, therefore, none
 "dread thy power so much, as weak mortals of the earth, the soul,
 "unafflicted either by thirst or hunger, and unmolested by sorrow,
 "enjoys gratification. As thou, O Yama! dost possess knowledge
 "respecting fire which is the means of attaining heaven, do thou "instruct me, who am full of faith, in that knowledge; for, those who "enjoy heaven, owing to their observance of sacred fire, are endowed "with the nature of celestial deities. This I ask of thee, as the "second favour which thou hast offered." Yama replied: "Being "possessed of a knowledge of fire, the means that lead to the "enjoyment of heavenly gratifications, I impart it to thee; which "do thou attentively observe. Know thou fire, as means to obtain "various mansions in heaven, as the support of the world, and as
 "residing in the body."*

Yama explained to Nachiketa the nature of fire, as being prior to all creatures, and also the particulars of the bricks and their number, which are requisite in forming the sacred fire, as well as the mode of preserving it. The youth repeated to Yama these instructions exactly as imparted to him; at which Yama being pleased, again spoke.

The liberal-minded Yama, satisfied with Nachiketa, thus says; "I shall bestow on thee another favour, which is, that this sacred fire shall be styled after thy name; and accept thou this valuable and various-coloured necklace. Receiving instructions from parents and spiritual fathers, a person who has thrice collected fire, as prescribed in the Veda, and also has been in habits of performing sacrifices, studying the Vedas, and giving alms, is not liable to repeated birth and death: he, having known and contemplated fire as originating from Brahma, possessing superior understanding, full of splendour, and worthy of praise, enjoys the highest fruition. A wise worshipper of sacred fire, who, understanding the three things prescribed, has offered oblation to fire, surmounting all afflictions during life, and extricated from sorrow, will enjoy gratifications in heaven.

"This, O Nachiketa! is that knowledge of sacred fire, the means of obtaining heaven, which thou didst require of me as the second favour; men shall call it after thy name. Make, O Nachiketa! thy third request."

Nachiketa then said: "Some are of opinion that after man's demise existence continues, and others say it ceases. Hence a doubt has arisen respecting the nature of the soul; I therefore wish to be instructed by thee in this matter. This is the last of the favours thou hast offered." Yama replied: "Even gods have doubted and disputed on this subject; which being obscure, never can be thoroughly comprehended: Ask, O Nachiketa! another favour instead of this. Do not thou take advantage of my promise, but give up this request." Nachiketa replied: "I am positively informed that gods entertained doubts on this subject; and even thou, O Yama! callest it difficult of comprehension. But no instructor on this point equal to thee can be found, and no other object is so desirable as this." Yama said: "Do thou rather request of me to give thee sons and grandsons, each to attain the age of an hundred years; numbers of cattle, elephants, goats, and horses; also extensive empire on earth, where thou shalt live as many years as thou wishest.

"If thou knowest another object equally desirable with these, ask it; together with wealth and long life. Thou mayest reign, O

"Nachiketa ! over a great kingdom : I will enable thee to enjoy all wished-for objects.

"Ask according to thy desire all objects that are difficult of acquisition in the mortal world. Ask these beautiful women, with elegant equipages and musical instruments, as no man can acquire any thing like them without our gift. Enjoy thou the attendance of these women, whom I may bestow on thee ; but do not put to me, O Nachiketa ! the question respecting existence after death."

Nachiketa then replied. "The acquisition of the enjoyments thou hast offered, O Yama ! is in the first place doubtful ; and should they be obtained, they destroy the strength of all the senses ; and even the life of Brahma is, indeed, comparatively short. Therefore let thy equipages, and thy dancing and music, remain with thee.

"No man can be satisfied with riches ; and as we have fortunately beheld thee, we may acquire wealth, should we feel desirous of it, and we also may live as long as thou exercisest the authority of the god of death ; but the only object I desire is what I have already begged of thee.

"A mortal being, whose habitation is the low mansion of earth, and who is liable to sudden reduction, approaching the gods emptied from death and debility, and understanding from them that there is a knowledge of futurity, should not ask of them any inferior favour—and knowing the fleeting nature of music, sexual gratification, and sensual pleasures, who can take delight in a long life on earth ? Do you instruct us in that knowledge which removes doubts respecting existence after death, and is of great importance with a view to futurity, and which is obscure and acquirable with difficulty. I, Nachiketa, cannot ask any other favour but this."

Yama now, after a sufficient trial of Nachiketa's resolution, answers the third question, saying, "Knowledge of God which leads to absorption, is one thing ; and rites, which have fruition for their object, another : each of these producing different consequences, holds out to man inducements to follow it. The man, who of these two chooses knowledge, is blessed ; and he who, for the sake of reward, practises rites, is excluded from the enjoyment of eternal beatitude. Knowledge and rites both offer themselves to man ; but "he who is possessed of wisdom, taking their respective natures into "careful consideration, distinguishes one from the other, and chooses "faith, despising fruition; and a fool, for the sake of advantage and "enjoyment, accepts the offer of rites."

"Then, O Nachiketa! knowing the perishable nature of the "desirable and gratifiable objects offered by me, hast rejected them,
 "and hast become a part of that contemptible practice, which leads "to fruit, and to which men in general are attached.
 "Who can be sensible that a knowledge of God which procures
 "salvation, and the performance of rites that produces fruition, are "entirely opposite to each other, and yield different consequences. I "perceive thee, Nachiketa, to be desirous of a knowledge of God, for
 "the numerous estimable objects offered by me cannot tempt thee.
 "Surrounded by the darkness of ignorance, fools consider themselves
 "wise and learned, and wander about in various directions, like
 "blind men when guided by a blind man."

"To an indifferent man who lives carelessly, and is immersed in
 "the desire of wealth, the means of gaining heavenly beatitude are "not manifest. He thinks that this visible world alone exists, and "that there is nothing hereafter; consequently he is repeatedly sub"jected to my control. The soul is that of whose real nature many "persons have never heard, and several though they have heard,
 "have not comprehended. A man who is capable of giving answers
 "thereon this subject is rare: one who listens to it attentively, must "be intelligent; and that one who, being taught by a wise teacher,
 "understands it, is uncommon."

"If a man of inferior abilities describe the nature of the soul, no
 "one will thoroughly understand it, for various opinions are held by "contending parties. When the subject is explained by a person "who believes the soul to emanate from God, doubt, in regard to its "eternity, ceases; but otherwise it is inexplicable and not capable of "demonstration."

"The knowledge respecting the soul which thou wilt gain by me,
 "cannot be acquired by means of reason alone; but it shall be "obtained from him who is venerated in the sacred authorities. Oh, "believed pupil, be satisfied that we have enigmas ere thee, who
 "art full of reason, and know that fruition, acquirable by means "of rites, is perishable; for nothing eternal can be obtained through "perishable means. Notwithstanding my conviction of the destruc-

"tile nature of fruition, I performed the worship of the sacred fire, whereby I became possessed of this sovereignty of long duration.

"Thou, Oh wise Nachiketa ! hast through firmness refused, though offered to thee, the state of Brahma, which satisfies every desire, and which is the support of the world—the best consequence of the performance of rites without limit or fear—praiseworthy—full of superhuman power—extensive and stable.

"The soul is that which is difficult to be comprehended—most obscure—veiled by the ideas acquired through the senses, and which resides in faculties—does not depart even in great danger, and exists unchangeable. A wise man knowing the resplendent soul, through a mind abstracted from worldly objects, and constantly applied to it, neither rejoices nor does he grieve.

"A mortal who, having heard the pure doctrines relative to the soul and retained them in his memory, knowing the invisible soul to be distinct from the body, feels rejoiced at his acquisition. I think the abode of the knowledge of God is open to thee."

Nachiketa then asked. "If thou knowest any Being who exists distinctly from rites, their consequences and their observers, and also from evil, and who is different from effects and their respective causes, and is above past, future, and present time, do thou inform me."

Yama replies : "I will explain to thee briefly that Being whom all the Vedas treat of, either directly or indirectly, to whom all austerities are directed, and who is the main object of those who perform the duties of an ascetic, He to wit, whom the word Om implies, is the Supreme Being.

"That Om is the title of Brahma and also of the Supreme Being, through means of which man may gain what he wishes ; (that is, if he worship Brahma by means of Om, he shall be received into his mansion ; or if through it he elevate his mind to God, he shall obtain absorption.)

"Om is the best of all means calculated to direct the mind towards God ; and it is instrumental either in the acquisition of the knowledge of God or of the dignity of Brahma : man therefore having recourse to this word, shall either be absorbed in God, or revered like Brahma.

"The soul is not liable to birth nor to death : it is mere understanding : neither does it take its origin from any other or from itself : hence it is unborn, eternal without reduction and unchangeable ;

"therefore the soul is not injured by the hurt which the body may receive. If any one ready to kill another imagine that he can destroy his soul, and the other think that his soul shall suffer destruction, they both know nothing; for neither does it kill nor is it killed by another.

"The soul is the smallest of the small, and greatest of the great. It resides in the hearts of all living creatures. A man who knows it and its pure state, through the steadiness of the external and internal senses, acquired from the abandoning of worldly desires, overcomes sorrow and perplexity.

"The soul, although without motion, seems to go to furthest space; and though it resides in the body at rest, yet seems to move everywhere. Who can perceive besides myself, that splendid soul, the support of the sensation of happiness and pain?

"The soul, although it is immaterial, yet resides closely attached to perishable material objects: knowing it as great and extensive, a wise man never grieves for it. A knowledge of the soul is not acquirable from the study of the Vedas, nor through retentive memory, nor yet by constant hearing of spiritual instruction: but he who seeks to obtain a knowledge of it, is gifted with it, the soul rendering itself conspicuous to him.

"No man can acquire a knowledge of the soul without abstaining from evil acts; without having control over the senses and the mind; nor can he gain it with a mind, though firm, yet filled with the desire of fruition; but man may obtain a knowledge of the soul through his knowledge of God.

"No ignorant man can, in a perfect manner, know the state of the existence of that God whose food is all things even the Brahma and the Kshatra; (that is, who destroys every object bearing figure and appellation); and who consumes death itself even as butter."

The end of the second Section of the first Chapter (2nd Valli).

"God and the soul* entering into the heart, the excellent divine abode, consume, while residing in the body, the necessary consequences of its actions; that is, the latter is rewarded or punished according to its good or evil actions, and the former witnesses all those events.

* The word soul here means the human soul, Jivatma; but generally in these translations it is used for Paramatma, the "Oversoul"—Ed.

"Those who have a knowledge of God, consider the former as light and the latter as shade : observers of external rites also, as well as those who have collected fire three times for worship, believe the same.

"We can know and collect fire, which is a bridge to the observers of rites; and can know the eternal and fearless God, who is the conveyor of those who wish to cross the ocean of ignorance. Consider the soul as a rider, the body as a car, the intellect its driver, the mind as its rein, the external senses are called the horses restrained by the mind, external objects are the roads: so wise men believe the soul united with the body, the senses and the mind, to be the partaker of the consequences of good or evil acts.

"If that intellect, which is represented as the driver, be indiscreet, and the rein of the mind loose, all the senses under the authority of the intellectual power become unmanageable; like wicked horses under the control of an unfit driver.

"If the intellect be discreet and the rein of the mind firm, all the senses prove steady and manageable; like good horses under an excellent driver.

"He, who has not a prudent intellect and steady mind and who consequently lives always impure, cannot arrive at the divine glory, but descends to the world.

"He who has a prudent intellect and steady mind, and consequently lives always pure, attains that glory from whence he never will descend.

"Man who has intellect as his prudent driver, and a steady mind as his rein, passing over the paths of mortality, arrives at the high glory of the omnipresent God.

"The origin of the senses is more refined than the senses; the essence of the mind is yet more refined than that origin: the source of intellect is again more exalted than that of the mind; the prime sensitive particle is superior to the source of intellect; nature, the apparent cause of the universe, is again superior to that particle, to which the omnipresent God is still superior: nothing is more exalted than God: he is therefore superior to all existences, and is the Supreme object of all. God exists obscurely throughout the universe, consequently is not perceived; but he is known through the acute intellect constantly directed towards him by wise men of penetrating understandings. A wise man shall transfer the power of speech and that of the senses to the mind, and the mind to the intellect, and the intellect to the purified soul, and the soul to the unchangeable Supreme Being.

"Rise up and awake from the sleep of ignorance; and having "approachable teachers, acquire knowledge of God, the origin of the "soul: for the way to the knowledge of God is considered by wise men "difficult as the passage over the Vajrapada of a razor. The Supreme "Being is not organised with the faculties of hearing, feeling, vision, "taste or smell. He is unchangeable and eternal; without beginning "and end, and is he and that particle which is the origin of the intellect:
 "from his seed all things are believed to be released from the grasp of death."

A wise man reading to Brahmins, or hearing from a teacher, this ancient doctrine imparted to Nachiketa by Yama, is absorbed into God.

He who reads this or at secret doctrine before an assemblage of Brahmins, or at the time of offering oblations, enjoys invulnerable good fortune.

The end of the third Sect or of the next Chapter (Sri Valli).

"God has created the senses to be directed to what is external, objects,
 "they consequently are apt to perceive outward things only, and not the "eternal spirit. But a wise man being desirous of eternal life, with"drawing his senses from their natural course, apprehends the omni"present Supreme Being.

"The ignorant seek external and desirable objects only;
 "consequently they are subjected to the chain of alluring death.
 "Hence the wise knowing that God alone remains stable & eternal in "this perishable world, does not search abroad for those objects.

"The Being, in which all the animate beings, "composed of various particles, perceive objects through vision, the "power of taste, of feeling, and of hearing, and also the pleasure
 "derivable from sexual intercourse, nothing can be unknown, he is "that existence which they desired to know.

"A wise man after having known that the soul, owing to whom "perceiving creatures perceive objects whether they dream or
 "wake, is great, extensive, never grieves.

"He also knows that the soul, which enjoys the fruits of good "and evil, is not connected with the body, is separated from
 "and is united with it, the fact of past and future events, will not
 "removal its nature, he is that existence which they desired to know.
 "He who knows that the prime sensitive particle, which preceded from "that prior to the creation of water and the other elements, having

"entered into the heart, exists united with material objects, knows the Supreme Being. He is that existence which thou desiredst to know.

"That sensitive particle which perceives objects, and includes all the celestial deities, and which was created with all the elements, exists, entering into the space of the heart, and there resides. It is that existence which thou desiredst to know.

"The sacred fire, the receiver of oblations after the wood has been kindled below and above, is preserved by its observers with the same care as pregnant women take of their foetus : it is praised daily by prudent observers, and men habituated to constant devotion. That atmosphere from whence the sun ascends, and in which he goes down, on which all the world, including fire, speech, and other things rest, and independently of which nothing exists, is that existence which thou desiredst to know. Whatever individual intellect there is connected with the body, is that intellectual principle, which is pure and immaterial existence, and the intellectual overspreading principle is the individual intellect ; but he who thinks here that they are different in nature, is subject to repeated transmigrations.

"Through the mind, purified by spiritual instructions, the knowledge that the soul is of divine origin, and by no means is different from its source, shall be acquired, whereby the idea of duality entirely ceases. He who thinks there is variety of intellectual principle, undergoes transmigration.

"The omnipresent spirit, extending over the space of the heart, which is the size of a finger, resides within the body ; and persons knowing him the Lord of past and future events, will not again attempt to conceal his nature : He is that existence which thou desiredst to know.

"The omnipresent spirit which extends over the space of the heart, the size of a finger, is the most pure light. He is the Lord of past and future events ; He alone pervades the universe now and ever ; He is that existence which thou desiredst to know. In the same way as water falling on uneven ground disperses throughout the hollow places, and is lost, so a man who thinks that the souls of different bodies are distinct in nature from each other, shall be placed in various forms by transmigration.

"As water falling on even grounds remains unchanged, so the soul of a wise man of steady mind is always pure, freed from the idea of duality."

End of the first Section of the second Chapter (4th Valli).

"The body is a dwelling with eleven gates, belonging to the unborn and unchangeable spirit, through whose constant contemplation man escapes grief, and acquiring absorption, is exempted from transmigration. He is that existence which thou desiredst to know.

"That spiritual Being acts always and moves in heaven ; preserves all material existence as depending on him ; moves in space ; resides in fire ; walks on the earth ; enters like a guest into sacrificial vessels ; dwells in man, in gods, in sacrifices ; moves throughout the sky ; seems to be born in water, as fishes, &c. ; produced on earth, as vegetables, on the tops of mountains, as rivers, and also as members of sacrifices : yet is he truly pure and great. He who causes breath to ascend above the heart and peditum to descend, resides in the heart : He is adorable ; and to him all the senses offer oblation of the objects which they preceive.

"When the soul, which is connected with the body, leaves it, nothing then remains in the body which may preserve the system : It is that existence which thou desiredst to know.

"Neither by the help of breath, nor from the presence of other powers, can a mortal exist : but they all exist owing to that other existence on which both breath and the senses rest.

"I will now disclose to you the secret doctrine of the eternal God : and also how man, void of that knowledge, O Gautama ! transmigrates after death.

"Some of those who are ignorant of this doctrine enter after death the womb of females to appear in the animal shape, while others assume the form of trees, according to their conduct and knowledge during their lives.

"The Being who continues to operate even at that time of sleep, when all the senses cease to act, and then creates desirable objects of various descriptions, is pure and the greatest of all ; and he alone is called eternal, on whom all the world rests, and independently of whom nothing can exist : He is that existence which thou desiredst to know. As fire, although one in essence, on becoming visible in the world, appears in various forms and shapes, according to its different locations, so God, the soul of the universe, though one, appears in various modes, according as he connects himself with different material objects, and, like space, extends over all.

"As air, although one in essence, in becoming operative in the body appears in various natures, as breath and other vital airs, so

"God, the soul of the universe, though one, appears in different modes, according as he connects himself with various material objects, and, like space, extends over all.

"As the sun, though he serves as the eye of all living creatures, yet is not polluted externally or internally by being connected with visible vile objects, so God, the soul of the universe, although one and omnipresent, is not affected by the sensations of individual pain, for he is beyond its action.

"God is but one; and he has the whole world under his control, for he is the operating soul in all objects; He, through his omniscience, makes his sole existence appear in the form of the universe. To those wise men who acquire a knowledge of him who is operative on the human faculties, is eternal beatitude allotted, and not to those who are void of that knowledge.

"God is eternal amidst the perishable universe; and is the source of sensation among all animate existences: and he alone assigns to so many objects their respective purposes: To those wise men who know him the ruler of the intellectual power, everlasting beatitude is allotted; but not to those who are void of that knowledge.

"How can I acquire that most gratifying divine knowledge, which, though beyond comprehension, wise men, by constant application of mind, alone obtain, as if it were present? Does it shine conspicuously?—and does it appear to the human faculties?

"Neither the sun, nor the moon, nor yet the stars can throw light on God: Even the illuminating lightning cannot throw light upon him; much less can limited fire give him light: But they all imitate him, and all borrow their light from him—that is, nothing can influence God and render him perspicuous: But God himself imparts his knowledge to the heart freed from passion and desire."

End of the second Section of the second Chapter (5th Valli).

"The world is a fig-tree of long duration, whose origin is above, and the branches of which, as different species, are below. The origin alone is pure and supreme; and he alone is eternal on whom all the world rests, and independently of whom nothing can exist. He is that existence which thou desiredst to know.

"God being eternal existence, the universe, whatsoever it is, exists and proceeds from him. He is the great dread of all heavenly bodies, as if he were prepared to strike them with thunderbolts; that none of them can decide from their respective sources

the nature of the object, as the external power the sun, the moon, the air, and the water, are constantly in motion.

knowing the soul to be distinct from the body, from different origins, and also from the elements, were again given.

the mind is more refined than the external senses, and is not so much affected by the elements. The grosser senses are the organs of the body, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses.

and effects. The objects of the senses are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses.

the objects of the senses are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses.

the objects of the senses are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses.

the objects of the senses are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses, and the apparent objects are the objects of the senses.

"who believes in the existence of God as the cause of the universe, no "one can have a notion of that Being. A man should acquire, first,
 "a belief in the existence of God, the origin of the universe ; and
 "next, a real knowledge of him ; to wit, that he is incomprehensible ;
 "for the means which lead men to acquire a knowledge of his existence,
 "graciously conduct them to the belief of his incomprehensibility.
 "When all the desires settled in the heart leave man, the mortal then "become immortal, and acquire absorption even in this life. When "the deep ignorance which occasions duality is entirely destroyed,
 "the mortal become immortal : This is the only doctrine which the "Vedanta inculcates.

"There are one hundred and one tubes connected with the heart,
 "one of which, called Sushumna, proceeds to the head : The soul of a "devotee proceeding through the hundred and first, is carried to the "mansion of the immortal Brahma ; and those of others, which ascend
 "by other tubes, assume different bodies, according to the evil or good "acts which they perform.

"The omnipresent eternal spirit resides always within that space of "the human heart which is as large as a finger : Man should, by firmness "of mind, separate that spirit from the body, in the same manner as "the pith is removed from the plant Munja : that is, the spirit should "be considered totally distinct from matter and the effects of matter—
 "and man should know that separated spirit to be pure and eternal."

Having thus acquired this divine doctrine, imparted to the God of death, with every thing belonging to it, Nachiketa, freed from the consequences of good or evil acts, and from mortality, was absorbed into God ; and whatever person also can acquire that knowledge, shall obtain absorption.

I have observed that the members of the Venetian, that all the members of the Venetian, with every heart, possess the liberty of that being which is out of the realm of superhuman and beyond all dreaming time. For the sake of the people, I have written a book, which later on that celebrated work and thought, and the present is an endeavor to translate the principal elements of the Venetian, in conformity to the demands of the great human world. The translation of the fragments belonging to the Venetian, the second division of the Venetian, being already completed, I have put into the press, and the other will immediately be printed, as soon as their translation is completed. It is evident, from these works, that the sole regulation of the Venetian is not only, which is a very great thing, but also, in the Venetian, of the Venetian, and of the Venetian, in the last state of thought and the sole cause of eternal thought, and that all that being is a very great thing, and everything is to be taken, whether the Venetian is a very great thing, or a very great thing, in respect to the meaning of the eternal gods and goddesses, and also, whether the Venetian is a very great thing, and whether the Venetian is a very great thing, for they repeatedly declare that to be one and alone the apprehension of eternal and eternal causes, they insist vigorously declare the demands of eternal gods and goddesses, and the needs of their worship, but they remain in the same contradictory conditions by attending to the fact, that the object of the worship is a very great thing, and the application to those who are engaged in the worship, those who are engaged in the worship, and those who are engaged in the worship, and those who are engaged in the attention on those invented figures, may be able to restrain themselves from vicious temptations, and that those that are competent for the worship of the invisible God, should disregard the worship of Idols. I repeat a few of these declarations as follows. The authority of Jamadagni is thus quoted by the great Raghunandana : "For the benefit of those who are inclined to worship, figures are invented to serve as representations of God, who is merely understanding, and has no second, no parts, nor figure ; consequently, to these representations, either male or female forms and other circumstances are fictitiously assigned." In the second Chapter of the first part of the Vishnu Purana it is said ; "God is without figure, epithet, definition or description. He is without defect, not liable to annihilation, change, pain or birth ; we can only say, That he, who is the eternal being is God." "The vulgar look for their gods in water ; men of more extended knowledge in celestial bodies ; the ignorant in wood, bricks, and stones ; but learned men in the universal soul." In the 84th Chapter of the tenth division of the Sri Bhagavata, Krishna says to Vyasa and others : It is impossible for those who consider pilgrimage as devotion, and believe that the divine nature exists in the image, to look up to, communicate with, to petition and to revere true believers in God. He who views as the soul this body formed of phlegm, wind and bile, or regards only wife, children, and relations as himself (that is, he who neglects to contemplate the nature of the soul), he who attributes a divine nature to earthen images, and believes in the holiness of water, yet pays not such respect to those who are endowed with a knowledge of God, is as an ass amongst cows." In the 9th Chapter of the Kularnava it is written : "A knowledge of the Supreme Being, who is beyond the power of expression and unchangeable, being acquired, all gods and goodesses, and their texts which represent them, shall become slaves." "After a knowledge of the Supreme Being has been attained, there is no need to attend to ceremonies prescribed by Sastras—no want of a fan should be felt, when a soft southern wind is found to refresh." The Mahanirvana says, "Thus corresponding to the nature of different powers or qualities, numerous figures have been invented for the benefit of those who are not possessed of sufficient understanding." From the foregoing quotations it is evident, that though the Vedas, Puranas, and Tantras, frequently assert the existence of the plurality of gods and goddesses, and prescribe the modes of their worship for men of insufficient understanding, yet they have also declared in a hundred others places, that these passages are to be taken merely in a figurative sense.

It cannot be alleged in support of Idolatry, that "although a knowledge of God is certainly above all things, still as it is impossible to acquire that knowledge, men should of course worship figured gods;" for, had it been impossible to attain a knowledge of the Supreme Being, the Vedas and Puranas, as well as Tantras, would not have instructed mankind to aim at such attainment; as it is not to be supposed that direction to acquire what is obviously unattainable could be given by the Sastra, or even by a man of common sense. Should the Idolater say, "that the acquisition of a knowledge of God, although it is not impossible, is most difficult of comprehension," I will agree with him in that point; but infer from it, that we ought, therefore, the more to exert ourselves, to acquire that knowledge; but I highly lament to observe, that so far from endeavouring to make such an acquisition, the very proposal frequently excites his anger and displeasure.

Neither can it be alleged that the Vedas, Puranas, &c., teach both the adoration of the Supreme Being and that of celestial gods and goddesses, but that the former is intended for Yatis or those that are bound by their profession to forsake all worldly considerations, and the latter for laymen; for, it is evident from the 48th Text of the 3rd Chapter of the Vedanta that a householder also is required to perform the worship of the Supreme Being.

Manu, also, the chief of Hindu lawgivers, after having prescribed all the varieties of rites and ceremonies, in Chapter 12th, Text 92, says, "Thus must the chief of the twice-born, though he neglect the ceremonial rites mentioned in the Sastras, be diligent in attaining a knowledge of God, in controlling his organs of sense, and in repeating the Veda."

Again in the 4th Chapter, in describing the duties of laymen, the same author says, "Some, who well know the ordinances for the oblations, do not perform externally the five great sacraments, but continually make offerings in their own organs of sensation and intellect."

"Some constantly sacrifice their breath in their speech, when they instruct others of God aloud, and their speech in their breath, when "they meditate in silence, perceiving in their speech and breath thus employed the imperishable fruit of a sacrificial offering."

"Other Brahmans incessantly perform those sacrifices only, seeing with the eye of divine learning, that the scriptural knowledge is the root of every ceremonial observance."

In the Yajnavalkya (Smṛiti) it is written :—"Even a householder, who acquires a livelihood honestly, has faith in the Supreme Being, shows hospitality to his guests, performs sacramental rites to his forefathers, and is in the practice of telling truth, shall be absorbed into the supreme essence." Should be it said, "It still remains unaccountable, that notwithstanding the Vedas and Puranas repeatedly declare the unity of the Supreme Being, and direct mankind to adore him alone, yet the generality of Hindus have a contrary faith, and continue to practise idolatry," I would in answer request attention to the foundation on which the practical part of the Hindu religion is built. Many learned Brahmans are perfectly aware of the absurdity of idolatry, and are well informed of the nature of the purer mode of divine worship. But as in the rites, ceremonies, and festivals of idolatry, they find the source of their comforts and fortune, they not only never fail to protect idol-worship from all attacks, but even advance and encourage it to the utmost of their power, by keeping the knowledge of their scriptures concealed from the rest of the people. Their followers, too, confiding in these leaders, feel gratification in the idea of the Divine Nature residing in a being resembling themselves in birth, shape, and propensities; and are naturally delighted with a mode of worship agreeable to the senses, though destructive of moral principles, and the fruitful parent of prejudice and superstition.

Some Europeans, indued with high principles of liberality, but unacquainted with the ritual part of Hindu idolatry, are disposed to palliate it by an interpretation which, though plausible, is by no means well founded. They are willing to imagine, that the idols which the Hindus worship, are not viewed by them in the light of gods or as real personifications of the divine attributes, but merely as instruments for raising their minds to the contemplation of those attributes which are respectively represented by different figures. I have frequently had occasion to remark, that many Hindus also who are conversant with the English language, finding this interpretation a more plausible apology for idolatry than any with which they are furnished by their own gospels, do not fail to avail themselves of it, though in repugnance both to their faith and to their practice. The declarations of this description of Hinduism naturally tend to confirm the original idea of such Europeans, who from the extreme absurdity of pure unqualified idolatry, deduce an argument against its existence. It appears to them impossible for men, even in the very last degree of intellectual darkness, to be so far misled as to consider a mere image of wood or of stone as a human being, much less as divine existence. With a view, therefore, to do away every misconception of the nature which may have prevailed, I beg leave to submit the following considerations.

Hindus of the present age, with a very few exceptions, have not the least idea that it is the attribution of the Supreme Being, as figuratively represented in shapes corresponding to the nature of those attributes, they offer him homage and worship under the denomination of gods and goddesses. On the contrary, the slightest investigation will clearly satisfy every inquirer, that it makes a material part of their system to hold as articles of faith all those particular circumstances, which are essential to belief in the independent existence of the objects of their relative adoration clothed with divine power.

Devotion to idolatry and a mode of existence analogous to their own mode of earthly things, are uniformly ascribed to each particular god. Thus the deities of form, more concerning the real spirit of the Scriptures, not only place an implicit reliance in the separate existence of form, but even, regarded as an omnipotent being, the greatest of all the deities, when, as they say, inhabit the northern mountain of hailson, and that he is accompanied by two wives and several children, and surrounded with numerous attendants. In like manner the followers of Vishnu, mistaking the allegorical representation of the doctrine for relations of real facts, believe him to be clothed with other gods, and that he resides with his wife and attendants in the summit of heaven. Similar opinions are also held by the votaries of Shakti, in respect to the nature of their deity. And in fact, these notions are equally applicable to every class of Hinduism, less in regard to their respective gods and goddesses. And so true are these notions in respect to the doctrine, that in the temples, where they meet in such vast numbers in Hindustan, Benares, Gaya, Kanoul, or Vishakhapatnam, the devotion, the worship, and the point of view dence not only occasions the warmest verbal altercations, but sometimes even blows and violence. Neither do they regard the images of those gods merely in the light of instruments for elevating the mind to the conception of those supposed beings; they are simply in themselves made objects of worship. For whatever Hindu purchases an idol in the market, or constructs one with his own hands, or has one made under his own superintendence, it is his invariable practice to perform certain ceremonies called Prana-Pratishtha, or the endowment of animation, by which he believes that its nature is changed from that of the mere materials of which it is formed, and that it acquires not only life but supernatural powers. Shortly afterwards, if the idol be of the masculine gender, he marries it to a feminine one, with no less pomp and magnificence than he celebrates the nuptials of his own children. The mysterious process is now complete, and the god and goddess are esteemed the arbiters of his destiny, and continually receive his most ardent adoration.

At the same time, the worshipper of images ascribes to them at once the opposite natures of human and of superhuman beings. In attention to their supposed wants as living beings, he is seen feeding, or pretending to feed them every morning and evening; and as in the hot season he is careful to fan them, so in the cold he is equally regardful of their comfort, covering them by day with warm clothing and placing them at night in a snug bed. But superstition does not find a limit here: the acts and speeches of the idols, and their assumption of various shapes and colours, are gravely related by the Brahmans, and with all the marks of veneration are firmly believed by their deluded followers. Other practices they have with regard to those idols which decency forbids me to explain. In thus endeavouring to remove a mistake, into which I have reason to believe many European gentlemen have been led by a benevolent wish to find an excuse for the errors of my countrymen, it is a considerable gratification to me to find that the latter have begun to be so far sensible of the absurdity of their real belief and practices, as to find it convenient to shelter them under such a cloak, however flimsy and borrowed. The adoption of such a subterfuge encourages me greatly to hope, that they will in time abandon what they are sensible cannot be defended; and that, forsaking the superstition of idolatry, they will embrace the rational worship of the God of Nature, as enjoined by the Vedas and confirmed by the dictates of common sense.

The argument which is frequently alleged in support of idolatry is that "those who believe God to be omnipresent, as declared by the doctrines of the Vedanta, are required by the tenets of such belief to look upon all existing creatures as God, and to shew divine respect to birds, beasts, men, women, vegetables, and all other existences; and as practical conformity to such doctrines is almost impossible, the worship of figured gods should be admitted." This misrepresentation, I am sorry to observe, entirely serves the purpose intended, by frightening Hindus in general from attending to the pure worship of the Supreme Regulator of the universe. But I am confident that the least reflection on the subject will clear up this point beyond all doubt; for the Vedanta is well known as a work which inculcates only the unity of God; but if every existing creature should be taken for a god by the followers of the Vedanta, the doctrines of that work must be admitted to be much more at variance with that idea than those of the advocates of idolatry, as the latter are contented with the recognition of only a few millions of gods and goddesses, but the Vedanta in that case must be supposed to admit the divinity of every living creature in nature. The fact is, that the Vedanta by declaring that "God is everywhere, and everything is in God," means that nothing is absent from God, and nothing bears real existence except by the volition of God, whose existence is the sole support of the conceived existence of the universe, which is acted upon by him in the same manner as a human body is by a soul. But God is at the same time quite different from what we see or feel.

The following texts of the Vedanta are to this effect [11th text of the 2nd section of the 3rd chapter of the Vedanta]: "That being, which is distinct from matter, and from those which are contained in matter, is not various, because he is declared by all the Vedas to be one beyond description;" and again, "The Veda has declared the Supreme Being to be mere understanding." Moreover, if we look at the conduct of the ancient true believers in God, as Janaka, the celebrated prince of Mithila, Vasisht'ha, Sanaka, Vyasa, Sankaracharya, and others whose characters as believers in one God are well known to the public by their doctrines and works, which are still in circulation, we shall find that these teachers, although they declared their faith in the omnipresent God according to the doctrines of the Vedanta, assigned to every creature the particular character and respect he was entitled to. It is, however, extremely remarkable, that the very argument which they employ to shew the impossibility of practical conformity to faith in the omnipresence of God, may be alleged against every system of their own idolatry; for the believers in the godhead of Krishna, and the devotees of Kali, as well as the followers of Siva, believe firmly in the omnipresence of Krishna,* Kali,† and Siva,‡ respectively. The authorities, then, for the worship of those gods, in declaring their omnipresence, would according to their own argument, enjoin the worship of every creature as much as of those supposed divinities. Omnipresence, however, is an attribute much more consonant with the idea of a Supreme Being than with that of any fictitious figure to which they pay divine honours! Another argument is, that "No man can have, as it is said by the Sastra, a desire of knowledge respecting the Supreme Being, unless his mind be purified; and as idol-worship purifies men's minds, it should be therefore attended to." I admit the truth of the first part of this argument, as a desire of the acquisition of a knowledge of God is an indication of an improved mind; consequently whenever we see a person possessed of that desire, we should attribute it to some degree of purification; but I must affirm with the Veda, that purity of mind is the consequence of divine worship, and not of any superstitious practices.

The Brihadaranyaka says, "Adore God alone." Again, "Nothing excepting the Supreme Being should be adored by wise men." "God alone rules the mind and relieves it from impurity."

The last of the principal arguments which are alleged in favour of idolatry is, that it is established by custom. "Let the authors of the Vedas, Puranas, and Tantras," it is said, "assert what they may in favour of devotion to the Supreme Being, but idol-worship has been practised for so many centuries that custom renders it proper to continue that worship." It is however evident to every one possessed of common sense, that custom or fashion is quite different from divine faith; the latter proceeding from spiritual authorities and correct reasoning, and the former being merely the fruit of vulgar caprice.

What can justify a man, who believes in the inspiration of his religious books, in neglecting the direct authorities of the same works, and subjecting himself entirely to custom and fashion, which are liable to perpetual changes and depend upon popular whim? But it cannot be passed unnoticed that those who practise idolatry and defend it under the shield of custom, have been violating their customs almost every twenty years, for the sake of little convenience, or to promote their worldly advantage : a few instances which are most commonly and publicly practised, I beg leave to state here.

1st. The whole community in Bengal, with very few exceptions, have, since the middle of last century, forsaken their ancient modes of the performance of ceremonial rites of religion, and followed the precepts of the late Raghunandan, and consequently differ in the most essential points of ceremonies from the natives of Behar, Tirhoot, and Benares. 2nd. The system of their sub-divisions in each caste, with the modes of marriage and intermarriage, is also a modern introduction altogether contrary to their law and ancient customs. 3rd. The profession of instructing European gentlemen in the Vedas, Smritis and Puranas, is a violation of their long established custom ; and, 4th. The supplying their European guests with wine and victuals in presence of their gods and goddesses is also a direct breach of custom and law. I may conclude this subject with an appeal to the good sense of my countrymen, by asking them, " whose advice appears the most disinterested and most rational—that of those who, concealing your scriptures from you, continually teach you thus, ' Believe whatever we may say—don't examine or even touch your scriptures, neglect entirely your reasoning faculties—do not only consider us, whatever may be our principles, as gods on earth, but humbly adore and propitiate us by sacrificing to us the greater part (if not the whole) of your property : ' or that of the man who lays your scriptures and their comments as well as their translations before you, and solicits you to examine their purport, without neglecting the proper and moderate use of reason ; and to attend strictly to their directions, by the rational performance of your duty to your sole Creator, and to your fellow-creatures, and also to pay true respect to those who think and act righteously." I hope no one can be so prejudiced as to be unable to discern which advice is most calculated to lead him to the best road to both temporal and eternal happiness.

INTRODUCTION.

THE physical powers of man are limited, and when viewed comparatively, sink into insignificance ; while in the same ratio, his moral aculties rise in our estimation, as embracing a wide sphere of action, and possessing a capability of almost boundless improvement. If the short duration of human life be contrasted with the great age of the universe, and the limited extent of bodily strength with the many objects to which there is a necessity of applying it, we must necessarily be disposed to entertain but a very humble opinion of our own nature ; and nothing perhaps is so well calculated to restore our self-complacency as the contemplation of our more extensive moral powers, together with the highly beneficial objects which the appropriate exercise of them may produce.

On the other hand, sorrow and remorse can scarcely fail, sooner or later, to be the portion of him who is conscious of having neglected opportunities of rendering benefit to his fellow-creatures. From considerations like these it has been that I (although born a Brahman, and instructed in my youth in all the principles of that sect), being thoroughly convinced of the lamentable errors of my countrymen, have been stimulated to employ every means in my power to improve their minds, and lead them to the knowledge of a purer system of morality. Living constantly amongst Hindoos of different sects and professions, I have had ample opportunity of observing the superstitious puerilities into which they have been thrown by their self-interested guides, who, in defiance of the law as well as of common sense, have succeeded but too well in conducting them to the temple of idolatry ; and while they hid from their view the true substance of morality, have infused into their simple hearts a weak attachment for its mere shadow.

For the chief part of the theory and practice of Hindooism, I am sorry to say, is made to consist in the adoption of a peculiar mode of diet ; the least aberration from which (even though the conduct of the offender may in other respects be pure and blameless) is not only visited with the severest censure, but actually punished by exclusion from the society of his family and friends. In a word, he is doomed to undergo what is commonly called loss of caste.

On the contrary, the rigid observance of this grand article of Hindoo faith is considered in so high a light as to compensate for every moral defect. Even the most atrocious crimes weigh little or nothing in the balance against the supposed guilt of its violation.

Murder, theft, or perjury, though brought home to the party by a judicial sentence, so far from inducing loss of caste, is visited in their society with no peculiar mark of infamy or disgrace.

A trifling present to the Brahman, commonly called Prayaschit, with the performance of a few idle ceremonies, are held as a sufficient atonement for all those crimes; and the delinquent is at once freed from all temporal inconvenience, as well as all dread of future retribution.

My reflections upon these solemn truths have been most painful for many years. I have never ceased to contemplate with the strongest feelings of regret, the obstinate adherence of my countrymen to their fatal system of idolatry, inducing, for the sake of propitiating their supposed Deities, the violation of every humane and social feeling. And this in various instances; but more especially in the dreadful acts of self-destruction and the immolation of the nearest relations, under the delusion of conforming to sacred religious rites. I have never ceased, I repeat, to contemplate these practices with the strongest feelings of regret, and to view in them the moral debasement of a race who, I cannot help thinking, are capable of better things; whose susceptibility, patience, and mildness of character, render them worthy of a better destiny. Under these impressions, therefore, I have been impelled to lay before them genuine translations of parts of their scripture, which inculcates not only the enlightened worship of one God, but the purest principles of morality, accompanied with such notices as I deemed requisite to oppose the arguments employed by the Brahmans in defence of their beloved system. Most earnestly do I pray that the whole may, sooner or later, prove efficient in producing on the minds of Hindus in general, a conviction of the rationality of believing in and adoring the Supreme Being only; together with a complete perception and practice of that grand and comprehensive moral principle—Do unto others as ye would be done by.

ISA UPANISHAD

OF THE

YAJUR VEDA.

1st. ALL the material extension in this world, whatsoever it may be, should be considered as clothed with the existence of the Supreme regulating spirit : by thus abstracting thy mind from worldly thoughts, preserve thyself from self-sufficiency, and entertain not a covetous regard for property belonging to any individual.

2nd. Let man desire to live a whole century, practising, in this world, during that time, religious rites, because for such a SELFISH MIND AS THINE, besides the observance of these rites, there is no other mode the practice of which would not subject thee to evils.

3rd. THOSE THAT NEGLECT THE CONTEMPLATION OF THE SUPREME SPIRIT, either by devoting themselves solely to the performance of the ceremonies of religion, or by living destitute of religious ideas, shall after death, ASSUME THE STATE OF DEMONS, such as that of the celestial gods, and of other created beings, WHICH ARE SURROUNDED WITH THE DARKNESS OF IGNORANCE.

4th. The Supreme Spirit is one and unchangeable : he proceeds more rapidly than the comprehending power of the mind : Him no external sense can apprehend, for a knowledge of him outruns even the internal sense : He though free from motion, seems to advance, leaving behind human intellect, which strives to attain a knowledge respecting him : He being the eternal ruler, the atmosphere regulates under him the whole system of the world.

5th. He, the Supreme Being, seems to move everywhere, although he in reality has no motion ; he seems to be distant from those who have no wish to attain a knowledge respecting him, and he seems to be near to those who feel a wish to know him : but, in fact, He pervades the internal and external parts of this whole universe.

6th. He, who perceives the whole universe in the Supreme Being (that is, he who perceives that the material existence is merely dependent upon the existence of the Supreme Spirit) ; and who also perceives the Supreme Being in the whole universe (that is, he who perceives that the Supreme Spirit extends over all material extension); does not feel contempt towards any creature whatsoever.

7th. When a person possessed of true knowledge conceives that God extends over the whole universe (that is, that God furnishes every particle of the universe with the light of his existence), how can he, as an observer of the real unity of the pervading Supreme existence, be affected with infatuation or grievance?

8th. He overspreads all creatures: is merely spirit, without the form either of any minute body, or of an extended one, which is liable to impression or organization: He is pure, perfect, omniscient, the ruler of the intellect, omnipresent, and the self-existent: He has from eternity been assigning to all creatures their respective purposes.

9th. Those observers of religious rites that perform only the worship of the sacred fire, and oblations to sages, to ancestors, to men, and the other creatures, without regarding the worship of celestial gods, shall enter into the dark regions: and those practisers of religious ceremonies who habitually worship the celestial gods only, disregarding the worship of the sacred fire, and oblations to sages, to ancestors, to men, and to other creatures, shall enter into a region still darker than the former.

10th. It is said that adoration of the celestial gods produces one consequence; and that the performance of the worship of sacred fire, and oblations to sages, to ancestors, to men, and to other creatures, produce another: thus have we heard from learned men who have distinctly explained the subject to us.

11th. Of those observers of ceremonies, whosoever, knowing that the adoration of celestial gods, as well as the worship of the sacred fire, and oblation to sages, to ancestors, to men, and to other creatures, should be observed alike by the same individual, performs them both, will, by means of the latter, surmount the obstacles presented by natural temptations, and will attain the state of the celestial gods through the practice of the former.

12th. Those observers of religious rites who worship Prakriti* alone, shall enter into the dark region: and those practisers of religious ceremonies that are devoted to worship solely the prior operating sensitive particle, allegorically called Brahma, shall enter into a region much more dark than the former.

*Prakriti (or nature) who though insensible, influenced by the Supreme Spirit, operates throughout the universe.

13th. It is said that one consequence may be attained by the worship of Brahma, and another by the adoration of Prakriti. Thus have we heard from learned men who have distinctly explained the subject to us.

14th. Of those observers of ceremonies, whatever person, knowing that the adoration of Prakriti and that of Brahma should be together observed by the same individual, performs them both, will, by means of the latter, overcome indigence, and will attain the state of Prakriti, through the practice of the former.

15th. "Thou hast, O sun," (says to the sun a person agitated on the approach of death, who during his life attended to the performance of religious rites, neglecting the attainment of a knowledge of God,) "thou hast, O sun, concealed by thy illuminating body the way to the true Being, who rules in thee. Take off that veil for the guidance of me thy true devotee."

16th. "O thou" (continues he), "who nourishest the world, movest singly and who dost regulate the whole mundane system—" O sun, son of Kasyapa, disperse thy rays for my passage, and with-draw thy violent light, so that I may by thy grace behold thy most "prosperous aspect." "Why should I" (says he, again retracting himself on reflecting upon the true divine nature) "why should I entreat the sun, as I AM WHAT HE IS," that is, "the Being who rules in the sun rules also in me."

17th. "Let my breath," resumes he, "be absorbed after death into the wide atmosphere; and let this my body be burnt to ashes. O my intellect, think now on what may be beneficial to me. O fire, remember what religious rites I have hitherto performed."

18th. "O illuminating fire," continues he, "observing all our religious practices, carry us by the right path to the enjoyment of the consequence of our deeds, and put an end to our sins; we being now unable to perform thy various rites, offer to thee our last salutation."*

*This example from the Vedas, of the unhappy agitation and wavering of an idolater on the approach of death, ought to make men reflect seriously on the miserable consequence of fixing their mind on any other object of adoration but the one Supreme Being.

PRESCRIPT

OFFERING SUPREME WORSHIP
 BY MEANS OF
THE GAYATRI,
 THE MOST SACRED TEXT OF THE VEDAS.

Thus says the illustrious Manu: "The three great immutable words (Bhuh, Bhuvah, Swah, or Earth, Space, Heaven)", preceded by the letter Om;* and also the "Gayatri, consisting of three measured lines, must be considered as the entrance to divine bliss."†

* Om, when considered as one letter uttered by the help of one articulation, is the symbol of the Supreme Spirit. It is derived from the radical अच् to preserve with the affix मन्. "One letter (Om) is the emblem of the most High."—Manu, II. 83. "This one letter, Om, is the emblem of the Supreme Being."—Bhagavadgita. It is true that this emblem conveys two sounds, that of o and of m, nevertheless it is held to be one letter in the above sense; and we meet with instances even in the ancient and modern languages of Europe that can justify such privileges; such as ≡ (Xi) and ψ (Psi) reckoned single letters in Greek, and Q, W, X, in English and others. But when considered as a triliteral word consisting of अ, उ, म, Om implies, the three Vedas, the three states of human nature, the three divisions of the universe, and the three deities, Brahma, Vishnu and Siva, agents in the creation, preservation, and destruction of this world; or, properly speaking, the three principal attributes of the Supreme Being personified as Brahma, Vishnu, and Siva. In this sense it implies, in fact, the universe controlled by the Supreme Spirit.

In all the Hindoo treatises of philosophy (the Puranas or didactic parables excepted), the methodical collection or expansion of matter is understood by the term creation, the gradual or sudden perversion of order is intended by destruction, and the power which wards off the latter from the former is meant by preservation.

The reason the authors offer for this interpretation is, that they in common with others, are able to acquire a notion of a Superintending Power, though unfelt and invisible, solely through their observation of material phenomena; and that should they reject this medium of conviction, and force upon themselves a belief of the production of matter from nothing, and of its liability to entire annihilation, then nothing would remain in the ordinary course of reasoning to justify their maintaining any longer a notion of that unknown Supreme Superintending Power.

† The last clause admits of another interpretation, viz., "must be considered as the mouth, or principal part of the Vedas."

"Whoever shall repeat them day by day, for three years, without negligence, shall approach the most High God, become free as air, and acquire after death an ethereal essence."

"From the three Vedas the most exalted Brahma successively milked out the three lines of this sacred text, beginning with the word Tat and entitled Savitri or Gayatri."

Yogi Yajnavalkya also declares, "By means of Om Bhuh, Bhuvah, and Swah; and the Gayatri, collectively, or each of the three singly, the most High God, the source of intellect, should be worshipped."

So Brahma himself formerly defined Bhuh, Bhuvah, Swah, (Earth, Space, Heaven) as the body of the Supreme Intelligence; hence these three words are called the Defined."

[Those that maintain the doctrine of the Universe being the body of the Supreme Spirit, found their opinion upon the following considerations:—

1st. That there are innumerable millions of bodies, properly speaking worlds, in the infinity of space.

2ndly. That they move, mutually preserving their regular intervals between each other, and that they maintain each other by producing effects primary or secondary, as the members of the body support each other.

3rdly. That those bodies, when viewed collectively, are considered one, in the same way as the members of an animal body or of a machine, taken together, constitute one whole.

5thly. It is maintained that body is as infinite as space, because body is found to exist in space as far as our perceptions, with the naked eye or by the aid of instruments, enable us to penetrate.

6thly. If body be infinite as space, the power that guides its members must be internal, and therefore styled the SOUL, and not external, since there can be no existence even in thought without the idea of location.

Hence this sect suppose that the Supreme all-pervading power is the soul of the universe, both * existing from eternity to eternity; and that the former has somewhat the same influence over the universe as the individual soul has over the individual body.

They argue further, that in proportion as the internally impelled body is excellent in its construction, the directing soul must be considered excellent. Therefore, inasmuch as the universe is infinite in extent, and is arranged with infinite skill, the soul by which it is animated must be infinite in every perfection.]

He (Yajnavalkya) again expounds the meaning of the Gayatri in three passages :

"We, say the adorers of the Most High, meditate on the supreme and omnipresent internal spirit of this splendid Sun. We meditate on the same Supreme Spirit, earnestly sought for by such as dread further mortal birth; who residing in every body as the all-pervading soul and controller of the mind, constantly directs our intellect and intellectual operations towards the acquisition of virtue, wealth, physical enjoyment, and final beatitude."

So, at the end of the Gayatri, the utterance of the letter Om is commanded by the sacred passage cited by Guna-Vishnu: "A Brahman shall in every instance pronounce Om, at the beginning and at the end; for unless the letter Om precede, the desirable consequence will fail; and unless it follow, it will not be long retained."

That the letter Om, which is pronounced at the beginning and at the end of the Gayatri expressly signifies the Most High, is testified by the Veda: viz., "Thus through the help of Om, you contemplate the Supreme Spirit." (Mundaka Upanishad.)

Manu also calls to mind the purport of the same passage: "And rites obtained in the Veda, such as oblation to fire and solemn offerings, pass away; but the letter Om is considered that which passes not away; since it is a symbol of the most High the Lord of created beings."

"By the sole repetition of Om and the Gayatri, a Brahman may indubitably attain beatitude. Let him perform or not perform any other religious rites, he being a friend to all creatures is styled a knower of God."

So Yogi Yajnavalkya says: "God is declared to be the object signified, and Om to be the term signifying: By means of a knowledge even of the letter Om, the symbol, God becomes propitious."

In the Bhagavadgita: "Om* (the cause), Tat† (that), Sat‡ (existing), these are considered three kinds of description of the Supreme Being."

In the concluding part of the commentary on the Gayatri by the ancient Bhatta Guna-Vishnu, the meaning of the passage is briefly given by the same author.

"He the spirit who is thus described, guides us. He, as the soul of the three mansions (viz., earth, space and heaven), of water, light, moisture, and the individual soul of all moving and fixed objects, and of Brahma, Vishnu, Siva, the sun and other gods of various descriptions, the Most High God, illuminating, like a brilliant lamp, the seven mansions, having carried my individual soul, as spirit, to the seventh heaven, the mansion of the worshippers of God called the True mansion, the residence of Brahma, absorbs it (my soul), through his divine spirit, into his own divine essence. The worshipper, thus contemplating, shall repeat the Gayatri."

Thus it is said by Raghunandan Bhattacharya, a modern expounder of law in the country of Gaur, when interpreting the passage beginning with "Pranava Vyahritibhyam:"§ "By means of pronouncing Om and Bhuh, Bhuvah, Swah,|| and the Gayatri, all signifying the Most High, and reflecting on their meaning, the worship of God shall be performed, and his grace enjoyed."

And also in the Maha Nirvana Tantra: "In like manner, among all texts the Gayatri is declared to be the most excellent: the worshipper shall repeat it when inwardly pure, reflecting on the meaning of it. If the Gayatri be repeated with Om and the Vyahriti (viz., Bhuh, Bhuvah, Swah), it excels all other theistical knowledge, in producing immediate bliss. Whosoever repeats it in

* "Om" implies the Being on whom all objects, either visible or invisible, depend in their formation, continuance, and change.

† "Tat" implies the Being that can be described only by the demonstrative pronoun "that," and not by any particular definition.

‡ "Sat" implies what "truly exists" in one condition independent of others. These three terms collectively imply, that the object contemplated through "Om" can be described only as "that" which "is existing."

The first term "Om" bears a striking similarity, both in sound and application, to the participle "ων" of the ve rbeimi to be, in Greek; and it is therefore not very improbable that one might have had its origin from the other. As to the similarity in sound, it is too obvious to require illustration; and a reference to the Septuagint will shew that ων like "Om" is applied to Jehova the ever existing God. Exodus, iii, 14. "Εγω εμι ο Ων" "Ὁ Ων ἀπεσάλκε με πρὸς ὑμᾶς."

§ मणवन्वाहृतिभ्याम्

॥ ओं भूः भुवः स्वः

“the morning or evening or during the night, while meditating on the Supreme Being, being freed from all past sins, shall not be inclined to act unrighteously. The worshipper shall first pronounce Om, then the three Vyahritis, and afterwards the Gayatri of three lines, and shall finish it with the term Om. We meditate on him from whom proceed the continuance, perishing, and production of all things; who spreads over the three mansions; that eternal Spirit, who inwardly rules the sun and all living creatures; most desirable and all-pervading; and who, residing in intellect, directs the operations of the intellectual power of all of us material beings. The worshipper, by repeating every day these three texts expressing the above meaning, attains all desirable objects without any other religious observance or austerity. ‘One only without a second’ is the doctrine maintained by all the Upanishads: that imperishable and incomprehensible Being is understood by these three texts. Whoever repeats them once or ten, or a hundred times, either alone or with many others, attains bliss in a proportionate degree. After he has completed the repetition, he shall again meditate on Him who is one only without a second, and all-pervading: thereby all religious observances, though not performed, shall have been virtually performed. Any one, whether a householder or not, whether a Brahman or not, all have equal right to the use of these texts as found in the Tantra.”

Here Om, in the first instance, signifies that Supreme Being who is the sole cause of the continuance, perishing, and production of all worlds. “He from whom these creatures are produced, by whom those that are produced exist, and to whom after death they return, is the Supreme Being, whom thou dost seek to know.”—The text of the Veda quoted by the revered Sankara Acharya in the Commentary on the first text of the Vedanta Darsana.

The doubt whether or not that cause signified by “Om” exists separately from these effects, having arisen, the second text, Bhuh, Bhuvah, Swah, is next read, explaining that God, the sole cause, eternally exists pervading the universe, “Glorious, invisible, perfect, unbegotten, pervading all, internally and externally, is He the Supreme Spirit.”—Mundaka Upanishad.

It being still doubted whether or not living creatures large and small in the world act independently of that sole cause, the Gayatri, as the third in order, is read. “Tat Savitur varenyam, Bhargo

"devasya dhimahi, dhiyo yo nah prachodayat." We meditate on that indescribable spirit inwardly ruling the splendid Sun, the express object of worship. He does not only inwardly rule the sun, but he, the spirit, residing in and inwardly ruling all us material beings, directs mental operations towards their objects. "He who inwardly rules the sun is the same immortal spirit who inwardly rules thee."—Chhandogya Upanishad. "God resides in the heart of all creatures."—Bhagavadgita.

The object signified by the three texts being one, their repetition collectively is enjoined. The following is their meaning in brief:

"We meditate on the cause of all, pervading all, and internally ruling all material objects, from the sun down to us and others."

[The following is a literal translation of the Gayatri according to the English idiom: "We meditate on that Supreme Spirit of the splendid sun who directs our understandings."]

The passage, however, may be rendered somewhat differently by transferring the demonstrative "that" from the words "Supreme Spirit" to the words "splendid sun." But this does not appear fully to correspond with the above interpretation of Yajnavalkya].

While translating this essay on the Gayatri, I deemed it proper to refer to the meaning of the text as given by Sir William Jones, whose talents, acquisitions, virtuous life, and impartial research, have rendered his memory an object of love and veneration to all. I feel so much delighted by the excellence of the translation, or rather the paraphrase, given by that illustrious character, that with a view to connect his name and his explanation of the passage with this humble treatise, I take the liberty of quoting it here.

The interpretation in question is as follows:—

"THE GAYATRI, OR HOLIEST VERSE OF THE VEDAS."

"Let us adore the supremacy of that divine sun,* the god-head † who illuminates all, who recreates all, from whom all proceed, to whom all must return, whom we invoke to direct our understandings aright in our progress toward his holy seat."

"What the sun and light are to this visible world, that are the Supreme good and truth to the intellectual and invisible universe; and, as our corporeal eyes have a distinct perception of objects enlightened by the sun, thus our souls acquire certain knowledge, by meditating on the light of truth, which emanates from the Being of beings: that is the light by which alone our minds can be directed in the path to beatitude."

* Opposed to the visible luminary.

CALCUTTA:

BEFORE I attempt to reply to the observations that the learned gentleman, who signs himself Sankara Sastri, has offered in his letter of the 26th December last, addressed to the Editor of the Madras Courier, on the subject of an article published in the Calcutta Gazette, and on my translation of an abridgment of the Vedanta and of the two chapters of the Vedas, I beg to be allowed to express the disappointment I have felt in receiving from a learned Brahman controversial remarks on Hindoo Theology written in a foreign language, as it is the invariable practice of the natives of all provinces of Hindoostan to hold their discussions on such subjects in Sanskrit, which is the learned language common to all of them, and in which they may naturally be expected to convey their ideas with perfect correctness and greater facility than in any foreign tongue : nor need it be alleged that, by adopting this established channel of controversy, the opportunity of appealing to public opinion on the subject must be lost, as a subsequent translation from the Sanskrit into English may sufficiently serve that purpose. The irregularity of this mode of proceeding, however, gives me room to suspect that the letter in question is the production of the pen of an English gentleman, whose liberality, I suppose, has induced him to attempt an apology even for the absurd idolatry of his fellow-creatures. If this inference be correct, while I congratulate that gentleman on his progress in a knowledge of the sublime doctrines of the Vedanta, I must, at the same time, take the liberty of entreating that he will, for the future, prefer consulting the original works written upon those doctrines, to relying on the second-hand information on the subject, that may be offered him by any person whatsoever.

* "The year 1817 saw further progress of the movement. Rammohun's publications now began to call forth learned and animated replies from the defenders of Hinduism. The Madras Courier, in December, 1816, contained a long letter from the head English master in the Madras Government College, Sankara Sastri, controverting Rammohun's views as shown in his writings, and pleading for the worship of Divine attributes as virtual deities. Rammohun reprinted this letter with a masterly reply entitled A Defence of Hindoo Theism, &c.—Miss Collet's The Life and Letters of Raja Rammohun Roy, p. 23.

The learned gentleman commences by objecting to the terms discoverer and reformer, in which the Editor of the Calcutta Gazette was pleased to make mention of me. He states, "That people of limited understanding, not being able to comprehend the system of worshipping the invisible Being, have adopted false doctrines, and by that means confounded weak minds in remote times; but due punishment was inflicted on those heretics, and religion was very well established throughout India by the Reverend Sankaracharya and his disciples, who, however, did not pretend to reform or discover them, or assume the title of a reformer or discoverer." In none of my writings, nor in any verbal discussion, have I ever pretended to reform or to discover the doctrines of the unity God, nor have I ever assumed the title of reformer or discoverer; so far from such an assumption, I have urged in every work that I have hitherto published, that the doctrines of the unity of God are real Hindooism, as that religion was practised by our ancestors, and as it is well-known even at the present age to many learned Brahmans: I beg to repeat a few of the passages to which I allude.

In the introduction to the abridgment of the Vedanta I have said: "In order, therefore, to vindicate my own faith and that of our forefathers, I have been endeavouring, for some time past, to convince my countrymen of the true meaning of our sacred books, and prove that my aberration deserves not the opprobrium which some unreflecting persons have been so ready to throw upon me." In another place of the same introduction: "The present is an endeavour to render an abridgment of the same (the Vedanta) into English, by which I expect to prove to my European friends, that the superstitious practices which deform the Hindoo religion, have nothing to do with the pure spirit of its dictates." In the introduction of the Kenopanishad: "This work will, I trust, by explaining to my countrymen the real spirit of the Hindoo scriptures which is but the declaration of the unity of God, tend in a great degree to correct the erroneous conceptions which have prevailed with regard to the doctrines they inculcate;" and in the Preface of the Isopanishad : "Many learned Brahmans are perfectly aware of the "absurdity of idol-worship, and are well informed of the nature of the pure mode of divine worship." A reconsideration of these passages will, I hope, convince the learned gentleman, that I never advanced any claim to the title either of a reformer or of a discoverer of the doctrines of the unity of the Godhead. It is not at all impossible that from the perusal of the translations above alluded to, the Editor of the Calcutta Gazette, finding the system of idolatry into which Hindoos are now completely sunk, quite inconsistent with the real spirit of their scriptures, may have imagined that their contents had become entirely forgotten and unknown ; and that I was the first to point out the absurdity of idol-worship, and to inculcate the propriety of the pure divine worship, ordained by their Vedas, their Smritis, and their Puranas. From this idea, and from finding in his intercourse with other Hindoos, that I was stigmatized by many, however unjustly, as an innovator, he may have been, not unnaturally, misled to apply to me the epithets of discoverer and reformer.

2ndly. The learned gentleman states : "There are an immense number of books, namely, Vedas, Sastras, Puranas, Agams, Tantras, Sutras, and Itihas, besides numerous commentaries, compiled by many famous theologians, both of ancient and modern times, respecting the doctrines of the worship of the invisible Being. They are not only written in Sanskrit, but rendered into the Prakrita, Telugu, Tamil, Gujrati, Hindoostani, Marhatti, and Canari languages, and immemorially studied by a great part of the Hindu nation, attached to the adwaitam faith, &c." This statement of the learned gentleman, as far as it is correct, corroborates indeed my assertion with respect to the doctrines of the worship of the invisible Supreme Spirit being unanimously inculcated by all the Hindoo Sastras, and naturally leads to severe reflections on the selfishness which must actuate those Brahmanical teachers who, notwithstanding the unanimous authority of the Sastras for the adoption of pure worship, yet, with the view of maintaining the title of God which they arrogate to themselves and of deriving pecuniary and other advantages from the numerous rites and festivals of idol-worship, constantly advance and encourage idolatry to the utmost of their power. I must remark, however, that there is no translation of the Vedas into any of the modern languages of Hindoostan with which I am acquainted, and it is for that reason that I have translated into Bengali the Vedanta, the Kenopanishad of the Sama Veda, the Isopanishad of the Yajur Veda, &c., with the contents of which none but the learned among my countrymen were at all acquainted.

3rdly. The learned gentleman states, that the translations of the scripture into the vulgar language are rejected by some people; and he assigns as reasons for their so doing, that "if the reader of them doubts the truth of the principles explained in the translation, the divine knowledge he acquired by them becomes a doubtful faith, and that doubt cannot be removed unless he compare them with the original work: in that case, the knowledge he lastly acquired becomes superior, and his study, in the first instance, becomes useless and the cause of repeating the same work." When a translation of a work written in a foreign tongue is made by a person at all acquainted with that language into his native tongue, and the same translation is sanctioned and approved of by many natives of the same country, who are perfectly conversant with that foreign language, the translation, I presume, may be received with confidence as a satisfactory interpretation of the original work, both by the vulgar and by men of literature.

It must not be supposed, however, that I am inclined to assert that there is not the least room to doubt the accuracy of such a translation; because the meaning of authors, even in the original works, is very frequently dubious, especially in a language like Sanskrit, every sentence of which, almost, admits of being explained in different senses. But should the possibility of errors in every translation be admitted as reason for withholding all confidence in their contents, such a rule would shake our belief, not only in the principles explained in the translation of the Vedanta into the current language, but also in all information respecting foreign history and theology obtained by means of translations: in that case, we must either learn all the languages that are spoken by the different nations in the world, to acquire a knowledge of their histories and religions, or be content to know nothing of any country besides our own. The second reason which the learned gentleman assigns for their objection to the translation is, that "Reading the scripture in the vulgar languages is prohibited by the Puranas." I have not yet met with any text of any Puranas which prohibit the explanation of the scripture in the vulgar tongue; on the contrary, the Puranas allow that practice very frequently. I repeat one of these declarations from the Siva Dharma, quoted by the great Raghunandana. "He who can interpret, according to the ratio of the understanding of his pupils, through Sanskrit, or through the vulgar languages, or by means of the current language of the country, is entitled, spiritual father." Moreover, in every part of Hindoostan all professors of the Sanskrit language instructing beginners in the Vedas, Puranas, and in other Sastras, interpret them in the vulgar languages; especially spiritual fathers in the exposition of those parts of the Vedas and Puranas, which allegorically introduce a plurality of gods and idol-worship, doctrines which tend so much to their own worldly advantage.

The learned gentleman states, that "The first part of the Veda prescribes the mode of performing yagam or sacrifice, bestowing danam or alms; treats of penance, fasting, and of worshipping the incarnations, in which the Supreme Deity has appeared on the earth for divine purposes. The ceremonies performed according to these modes, forsaking their fruits, are affirmed by the Vedas to be mental exercises and mental purifications necessary to obtain the knowledge of the divine nature." I, in common with the Vedas and the Vedanta, and Manu (the first and best of Hindoo lawgivers) as well as with the most celebrated Sankaracharya, deny these ceremonies being necessary to obtain the knowledge of the divine nature, as the Vedanta positively declares, in text 36, section 4th, chapter 3rd: "Man may acquire the true knowledge of God, even without observing the rules and rites prescribed by the Veda for each class: as it is found in the Veda that many persons who neglected the performance of the rites and ceremonies, owing to their perpetual attention to the adoration of the Supreme Being, acquired the true knowledge respecting the Supreme Spirit." The Veda says: "Many learned true believers never worshipped fire, or any celestial gods through fire." And also the Vedanta asserts, in the 1st text of the 3rd section of the 3rd chapter: The worship authorized by all the Vedas is one, as the directions for the worship of the only Supreme Being are invariably found in the Veda, and the epithets of the Supreme and "Omnipresent Being, &c., commonly imply God alone." Manu, as I have elsewhere quoted, thus declares on the same point, chapter 12th, text 92nd: "Thus must the chief of the twice-born, though he neglect the ceremonial rites mentioned in the Sastra, be diligent in attaining a knowledge of God, in controlling his organs of sense, and in repeating the Veda." Again, chapter 4th, text 23rd: "Some constantly "sacrifice their breath in their speech, when they instruct others of God aloud, and their speech in their breath, when they meditate in silence; perceiving in their speech and breath thus employed, the imperishable fruit of a sacrificial offering." 24th: "Other Brahmans incessantly perform those sacrifices only, seeing with the eye of divine learning, that the scriptural knowledge is the root of every ceremonial observance." And also the same author declares in chapter 2nd, text 84: "All rites ordained in the Veda, oblations to fire and solemn sacrifices, pass away; but that which passes not away is declared to be the syllable Om, thence called Akshara since it is a symbol of God, the Lord of created beings."

5thly. The learned gentleman states, that "the difficulty of attaining a knowledge of the Invisible and Almighty Spirit is evident from the preceding verses." I agree with him in that point, that the attainment of perfect knowledge of the nature of the God-head is certainly difficult, or rather impossible; but to read the existence of the Almighty Being in his works of nature, is not, I will dare to say, so difficult to the mind of a man possessed of common sense, and unfettered by prejudice, as to conceive artificial images to be possessed, at once, of the opposite natures of human and divine beings, which idolaters constantly ascribe to their idols, strangely believing that things so constructed can be converted by ceremonies into constructors of the universe.

6thly. The learned gentleman objects to our introducing songs, although expressing only the peculiar tenets of monotheism, and says: "But the holding of meetings, playing music, singing songs, and dancing, which are ranked among carnal pleasures, are not ordained by scripture, as mental purification." The practice of dancing in divine worship, I agree, is not ordained by the scripture, and accordingly never was introduced in our worship; any mention of dancing in the Calcutta Gazette must, therefore, have proceeded from misinformation of the Editor. But respecting the propriety of introducing monotheistical songs in the divine worship, I beg leave to refer the gentleman to texts 114th and 115th of the 3rd chapter of Yajnavalkya, who authorizes not only scriptural music in divine contemplation, but also the songs that are composed by the vulgar. It is also evident that any interesting idea is calculated to make more impression upon the mind, when conveyed in musical verses, than when delivered in the form of common conversation.

7thly. The learned gentleman says : "All the Brahmans in this peninsula are studying the same Vedam as are read in the other parts of the country ; but I do not recollect to have read or heard of one treating on astronomy, medicine, or arms : the first is indeed an angam of the Vedam, but the two latter are taught in separate Sastras."—in answer to which I beg to be allowed to refer the gentleman to the following text of the Nirvana : "The Vedas, while talking of planets, botany, austere duties, arms, rites, natural consequences, and several other subjects, are purified by the inculcation of the doctrines of the Supreme Spirit." And also to the latter end of the Mahanirvana agam.

From the perusal of these texts, I trust, he will be convinced that the Vedas not only treat of astronomy, medicine, and arms, but also of morality and natural philosophy, and that all arts and sciences that are treated of in other Sastras, were originally introduced by the Vedas : see also Manu, chapter 12, verses 97 and 98. I cannot of course be expected to be answerable for Brahmans neglecting entirely the study of the scientific parts of the Veda, and putting in practice, and promulgating to the utmost of their power, that part of them which, treating of rites and festivals, is justly considered as the source of their worldly advantages and support of their alleged divinity.

8thly. I observe, that on the following statement in my Introduction to the Kenopanishad, viz., "Should this explanation given by the Veda itself, as well as by its celebrated commentator, Vyasa, not be allowed to reconcile those passages which are seemingly at variance with each other, as those that declare the unity of the invisible Supreme Being, with others which describe a plurality of independent visible gods, the whole work must, I am afraid, not only be stripped of its authority, but looked upon as altogether unintelligible," the learned gentleman has remarked that "To say the least of this passage, RAM MOHUN ROY appears quite as willing to abandon as to defend the Scripture of his Religion."

In the foregoing paragraph, however, I did no more than logically confine the case to two points, viz., that the explanation of the Veda and of its commentators must either be admitted as sufficiently reconciling the apparent contradictions between different passages of the Veda or must not be admitted. In the latter case, the Veda must necessarily be supposed to be inconsistent with itself, and therefore altogether unintelligible, which is directly contrary to the faith of Hindus of every description ; consequently they must admit that those explanations do sufficiently reconcile the seeming contradictions between the chapters of the Vedas.

9thly. The learned gentleman says that "Their (the attributes "and incarnations) worship under various representations, by means "of consecrated objects, is prescribed by the scripture to the human "race, by way of mental exercises," &c. I cannot admit that the worship of these attributes under various representations, by means of consecrated objects, has been prescribed by the Veda to the HUMAN RACE ; as this kind of worship of consecrated objects is enjoined by the Sastra to those only who are incapable of raising their minds to the notion of an invisible Supreme Being. I have quoted several authorities for this assertion in my Preface to the Isopanishad, and beg to repeat here one or two of them : "The vulgar look for their God in "water ; men of more extended knowledge in celestial bodies ; the "ignorant in wood, bricks, and stones ; but learned men in the "Universal Soul." "Thus corresponding to the nature of different "powers or qualities, numerous figures have been invented for the "benefit of those who are not possessed of sufficient understanding." Permit me in this instance to ask, whether every Mussulman in Turkey and Arabia, from the highest to the lowest, every Protestant Christian at least of Europe, and many followers of Kabir and Nanak, do worship God without the assistance of consecrated objects ? If so, how can we suppose that the human race is not capable of adoring the Supreme Being without the puerile practice of having recourse to visible objects ?

10thly. The learned gentleman is of opinion that the attributes of God exist distinctly from God and he compares the relation between God and these attributes to that of a king to his ministers, as he says : "If a person be desirous to visit an earthly prince, he "ought to be introduced in the first instance by his ministers," &c. ; and "in like manner the grace of God ought to be obtained by "the grace through the worship of his attributes." This opinion, I am extremely sorry to find, is directly contrary to all the Vedanta doctrines interpreted to us by the most revered Sankaracharya, which are real adwaita or non-duality ; they affirm that God has no second that may be possessed of eternal existence, either of the same nature with himself or of a different nature from him, nor any second of that nature that might be called either his part or his quality. The 16th text of the 2nd section of the 3rd chapter: "The Veda has declared the Supreme Being to be mere understanding." The Veda says; "God is real existence, wisdom and eternity." The Veda very often calls the Supreme Existence by the epithets of Existent, Wise, and Eternal; and assigns as the reason for adopting such epithets, that the Veda in the first instance speaks of God according to the human idea, which views quality separately from person, in order to facilitate our comprehension of objects. In case these attributes should be supposed, as the learned gentleman asserts, to be separate existences, it necessarily follows, that they must be either eternal or non-eternal. The former case, viz. the existence of a plurality of beings imbued like God himself with the property of eternal duration, strikes immediately at the root of all the doctrines relative to the unity of the Supreme Being contained in the Vedanta. By the latter sentiment, namely, that the power and attributes of God are not eternal, we are led at once into the belief that the nature of God is susceptible of change, and consequently that He is not eternal, which makes no inconsiderable step towards atheism itself. These are the obvious and dangerous consequences, resulting from the learned gentleman's doctrine, that the attributes of the Supreme Being are distinct existences. I am quite at a loss to know how these attributes of the pure and perfect Supreme Being (as the learned gentleman declares them to exist really and separately, and not fictitiously and allegorically,) can be so sensual and destitute of morality as the creating attribute or Brahma is said to be by the Puranas, which represent him in one instance as attempting to commit a rape upon his own daughter. The protecting attribute, or Vishnu, is in another place affirmed to have fraudulently violated the chastity of Brinda, in order to kill her husband. Siva, the destroying attribute, is said to have had a criminal attachment to Mohini, disregarding all ideas of decency. And a thousand similar examples must be familiar to every reader of the Puranas. I should be obliged by the learned gentleman's showing how the contemplation of such circumstances, which are constantly related by the worshippers of these attributes, even in their sermons, can be instrumental towards the purification of the mind, conducive to morality, and productive of eternal beatitude. Besides, though the learned gentleman in this instance considers these attributes to be separate existences, yet in another place he seems to view them as parts of the Supreme Being, as he says: "If one part of the ocean be adored, the ocean is adored." I am somewhat at a loss to understand how the learned gentleman proposes to reconcile this apparent contradiction. I must observe, however, in this place, that the comparison drawn between the relation of God and those attributes, and that of a king and his ministers, is totally inconsistent with the faith entertained by Hindoos of the present day; who, so far from considering these objects of worship as mere instruments by which they may arrive at the power of contemplating the God of nature, regard them in the light of independent gods, to each of whom, however absurdly, they attribute almighty power, and a claim to worship, solely on his own account.

11thly. The learned gentleman is dissatisfied with the objection mentioned in my translation to worshipping these fictitious representations, and remarks, that "the objections to worshipping the attributes are not satisfactorily stated by the author." I consequently repeat the following authorities, which I hope may answer my purpose. The following are the declarations of the Veda; "He who worships any God excepting the Supreme Being, and thinks that he himself is distinct and inferior to that God, knows nothing, and is considered as a domestic beast of these gods." "A state even so high as that of Brahma does not afford real bliss." "Adore God alone." "None but the Supreme Being is to be worshipped; nothing excepting him should be adored by a wise man." I repeat also the following text of the Vedanta: "The declaration of the Veda, that those that worship the celestial gods are the food of such gods, is an allegorical expression, and only means, that they are comforts to the celestial gods as food to mankind; for he who has no faith in the Supreme Being is rendered subject to these gods. The Veda affirms the same."

And the revered Sankaracharya has frequently declared the state of celestial gods to be that of demons, in the Bhashya of the Isopanishad and of others.

To these authorities a thousand others might be added. But should the learned gentleman require some practical grounds for objecting to the idolatrous worship of the Hindoos, I can be at no loss to give him numberless instances, where the ceremonies that have been instituted under the pretext of honouring the all-perfect Author of Nature, are of a tendency utterly subversive of every moral principle.

I begin with Krishna as the most adored of the incarnations, the number of whose devotees is exceedingly great. His worship is made to consist in the institution of his image or picture, accompanied by one or more females, and in the contemplation of his history and behaviour, such as his perpetration of murder upon a female of the name of Putana; his compelling a great number of married and unmarried women to stand before him denuded; his debauching them and several others, to the mortal affliction of their husbands and relations; his annoying them, by violating the laws of cleanliness and other facts of the same nature. The grossness of his worship does not find a limit here. His devotees very often personify (in the same manner as European actors upon stages do) him and his female companions, dancing with indecent gestures, and singing songs relative to his love and debaucheries. It is impossible to explain in language fit to meet the public eye, the mode in which Mahadeva, or the destroying attribute, is worshipped by the generality of the Hindoos; suffice it to say, that it is altogether congenial with the indecent nature of the image, under whose form he is most commonly adored.

The stories respecting him which are read by his devotees in the Tantras, are of a nature that, if told of any man, would be offensive to the ears of the most abandoned of either sex. In the worship of Kali, human sacrifices, the use of wine, criminal intercourse, and licentious songs are included: the first of these practices has become generally extinct; but it is believed that there are parts of the country where human victims are still offered.

Debauchery, however, universally forms the principal part of the worship of her followers. Nigam and other Tantras may satisfy every reader of the horrible tenets of the worshippers of the two latter deities. The modes of worship of almost all the inferior deities are pretty much the same. Having so far explained the nature of worship adopted by Hindoos in general, for the propitiation of their allegorical attributes, in direct opposition to the mode of pure divine worship inculcated by the Vedas, I cannot but entertain a strong hope that the learned gentleman, who ranks even monotheistical songs among carnal pleasures, and consequently rejects their admittance in worship, will no longer stand forward as an advocate for the worship of separate and independent attributes and incarnations.

12thly. The learned gentleman says, "that the Saviour," meaning Christ, "should be considered a personification of the mercy and kindness of God (I mean actual not allegorical personification)." From the little knowledge I had acquired of the tenets of Christians and those of anti-Christians, I thought there were only three prevailing opinions respecting the nature of Christ, viz., that he was considered by some as the expounder of the laws of God, and the mediator between God and man; by many to be one of the three mysterious persons of the Godhead; whilst others, such as the Jews, say that he was a mere man. But to consider Christ as a personification of the mercy of God is, if I mistake not, a new doctrine in Christianity, the discussion of which, however, has no connexion with the present subject. I, however, must observe that this opinion, which the learned gentleman has formed of Christ being a personification of the mercy of God, is similar to that entertained by Mussulmans, for a period of upwards of a thousand years, respecting Mohummud, whom they call the mercy of God upon all his creatures. The learned gentleman, in the conclusion of his observations, has left, as he says, the doctrines of pure allegory to me. It would have been more consistent with justice had he left pure allegory also to the Vedas, which declare, "appellations and figures of all kinds are innovations," and which have allegorically represented God in the figure of the universe: "Fire is his head, the sun and the moon are his two eyes," &c.; and which have also represented all human internal qualities by different earthly objects; and also to Vyasa who has strictly followed the Vedas in these figurative representations, and to Sankaracharya, who also adopted the mode of allegory in his Bhashya of the Vedanta and of the Upanishads.

Two publications only have yet appeared with the professed object of defending Hindoo idolatry against the arguments which I have adduced from the Vedanta and other sacred authorities, in proof of the erroneousness of that system. To the first, which appeared in a Madras journal, my reply has been for some time before the public. The second, which is the object of the present answer, and is supposed to be the production of a learned Brahman* now residing in Calcutta, was printed both in Bengali and in English; and I have therefore been under the necessity of preparing a reply in both of those languages. That which was intended for the perusal of my countrymen, issued from the press a few weeks ago. For my European readers I have thought it advisable to make some additional remarks to those contained in the Bengali publication, which I hope will tend to make my arguments more clear and intelligible to them than a bare translation would do.

SECOND DEFENCE.

THE learned Brahman, in his defence of idolatry, thus begins: "Let it not be supposed that the following treatise has been written "with a view to refute the doctrines of those assuming inventors and "self-interested moderns," &c. "It is solely with the intention of "expressing the true meaning of these authorities that this brief "treatise has been composed;" and he thus concludes: "The Vedanta "Chandrika, or lunar light of the Vedanta, has thus been made "apparent, and thus the glow-worm's light has been eclipsed." It is very much to be feared that, from the perusal of this treatise, called the lunar light of the Vedanta, but filled up with* satirical fables,† abusive expressions, and contradictory assertions, sometimes admitting monotheism, but at the same time blending with it and defending polytheism,‡ those foreign gentlemen, as well as those natives of this country who are not acquainted with the real tenets of the Vedanta, might on a superficial view form a very unfavourable opinion of that theology, which, however, treats with perfect consistency of the unity and universality of the Supreme Being, and forbids, positively, treating with contempt or behaving ill towards any creature whatsoever.

As to the satire§ and abuse, neither my education permits any return by means of similar language, nor does the system of my religion admit even a desire of unbecoming retaliation: situated as I am, I must bear them tranquilly.

of course be expected, when irritated with contradiction, to pay due attention, unless checked by fear, to the propriety of the use of decent expressions, either in common conversation or in religious controversy.

The total sum of the arguments, set forth as far as page 13, of the translation of this treatise (however inconsistent they are with each other), seems intended to prove that faith in the Supreme Being, when united with moral works, leads men to eternal happiness.

This doctrine, I am happy to observe, strongly corroborates every assertion that I have made in my translation, a few paragraphs of which I beg leave to repeat here for the satisfaction of my readers. In the abridgment of the Vedanta, page 14: "The Vedanta shews "that moral principle is a part of the adoration of God, viz., a command over passions and over the external senses of the body, and "good acts are declared by the Veda to be indispensable in the mind's "approximation to God; they should therefore be strictly taken care "of, and attended to both previously and subsequently to such approximation to the Supreme Being; that is to say, we should not indulge "our evil propensities, but should endeavour to have entire control "over them: reliance on, and self-resignation to the only true Being, "with an aversion to worldly considerations, are included in the good "acts above alluded to." In the introduction to the Isopanishad (page 74): "Under these impressions, therefore, I have been impelled "to lay before them genuine translations of parts of their scriptures, "which inculcate not only the enlightened worship of One God, but "the purest principles of morality." But the learned Brahman asserts, in two instances, among arguments above noticed, that the worship of a favoured deity and that of an image are also considered to be acts of morality. The absurdity of this assertion will be shown afterwards, in considering the subject of idol-worship. To English readers, however, it may be proper to remark, that the Sanskrit word which signifies works, is not to be understood in the same sense as that which it implies in Christian theology, when works are opposed to faith. Christians understand by works, actions of moral merit, whereas Hindus use the term in their theology only to denote religious rites and ceremonies prescribed by Hindu lawgivers, which are often irreconcilable with the commonly received maxims of moral duty; as, for instance, the crime of suicide prescribed to widows by Angira, and to pilgrims at holy places by the Narasinha and Kurma Puranas. I do not, therefore, admit that works, taken in the latter sense (that is, the different religious acts prescribed by the Sastra to the different classes of Hindus respectively) are necessary to attain divine faith, or that they are indispensable accompaniments of holy knowledge; for the Vedanta in chapter 3rd, section 4th, text 37th, positively declares that the true knowledge of God may be acquired without observing the rules and rites prescribed by the Sastra to each class of Hindus; and also, examples are frequently found in the Veda of persons, who, though they neglected the performance of religious rites and ceremonies, attained divine knowledge and absorption by control over their passions and senses, and by contemplation of the Ruler of the universe. Manu, the first and chief of all Hindu lawgivers, confirms the same doctrines in describing the duties of laymen, in the texts 22nd, 23rd and 24th of the 4th chapter of his work; and in the Bhashya, or commentaries on the Isopanishad, and on the other Upanishads of the Vedas, the illustrious Sankaracharya declared the attainment of faith in God, and the adoration of the Supreme Being, to be entirely independent of Brahmanical ceremonies; and the Veda affirms that "many learned true believers never worshipped fire, nor any celestial god through fire." The learned Brahman, although he has acknowledged himself, in p. 9th, line 6th, of his treatise, that, "in the opinion of Sankaracharya the attainment of absorption does not depend on works of merit" (or, properly speaking, on religious rites), yet forgetting the obedience he has expressed to be due to the instruction* of that celebrated commentator, has immediately contradicted his opinion, when he says in p. 9, l. 9: "It has also been ascertained that acts of merit (Brahmanical rites) must be performed previously to the attainment of "divine knowledge;" for, if divine knowledge were to be dependent on the observance of Brahmanical rites, and absorption dependent on divine knowledge, it would follow necessarily that absorption would depend on Brahmanical rites, which is directly contrary to the opinion of the commentator quoted by the learned Brahman himself.

Moreover, the learned Brahman at first states (p. 11, l. 12) that "in the ancient writers we read that a knowledge of Brahma or "holy knowledge, is independent of acts" (religious rites); but he again contradicts this statement, and endeavours to explain it away (p. 11, l. 24) : " Thus when the Sastras state that absorption " may be attained even though the sacrificial fires be neglected, " the praise of that holy knowledge is intended, but not the depreciation of meritorious acts " (Brahmanical rites). Here he chooses to accuse his scripture, and ancient holy writers, of exaggerated and extravagant praise of holy knowledge, rather than that the least shock should be given by their authority to the structure of paganism and idolatry. From this instance, the public may perceive how zealous the learned Brahman and his brethren are, in respect to the preservation of their fertile estate of idolatry, when they are willing to sacrifice to it even their own scriptural authorities.

Upon a full perusal of the treatise, it appears that the arguments employed by the learned Brahman have no other object than to support the weak system of idol-worship, inasmuch as he repeatedly declares, that the adoration of 330,000,000 dieties, especially the principal ones, such as Siva, Vishnu, Kali, Ganesa, the Sun and others, through their several images, has been enjoined by the Sastras, and sanctioned by custom. I am not a little surprised to observe, that after having perused my Preface to the Isopanishad in Bengali (of which during the last twelve months I have distributed nearly five hundred copies amongst all descriptions of Hindoos), the learned Brahman has offered no objection to what I have therein asserted, relative to the reason assigned by the same Sastras, as well for the injunction to worship these figured beings, as for the general prevalence of idol-worship in this country.

In that work, I admitted that the worship of these deities was directed by the Sastra ; but, at the same time, I proved by their own authority, that this was merely a concession made to the limited faculties of the vulgar, with the view of remedying, in some degree, the misfortune of their being incapable of comprehending and adopting the spiritual worship of the true God. Thus, in the aforesaid Preface, I remarked : " For they (the " Puranas, Tantras, &c.) repeatedly declare God to be one, and above " the apprehension of the external and internal senses. They indeed " expressly declare the divinity of many gods and the mode of " their worship : but they reconcile those contradicting assertions " by affirming frequently, that the directions to worship any celestial beings are only applicable to those who are incapable of " elevating their minds to the idea of an invisible being." And, with the view to remove every doubt as to the correctness of my assertion, I at the same time quoted the most unquestionable authorities, a few of which I shall here repeat. "Thus corresponding to the natures of different powers and qualities, numerous figures have been invented for the benefit of those who are not possessed of sufficient understanding." "The vulgar look for their gods in water; men of more extended knowledge, in celestial bodies; the ignorant, in wood, bricks, and stones; but learned men in the Universal Soul." "It is impossible for those who consider pilgrimage as devotion, and believe that the divine nature exists in the image, to look up to, communicate with, to petition, and to serve true believers in God."

Such indeed is the prevalent nature of truth, that when to dispute it is impossible, the learned Brahman has not been always successful in concealing it, even when the admission is most fatal to his own argument. In p. 28, l. 34, he says: "But to those it is enjoined who, from a defective understanding, do not perceive that God exists in every thing, that they should worship him through the medium of some created object." In making this acknowledgment, the learned Brahman has confirmed the correctness of all my assertions; though the evident conclusion is, that he and all his followers must either immediately give up all pretensions to understanding, or forsake idolatry.

In my former tract, I not only proved that the adoration of the Supreme Being in spirit was prescribed by the Veda to men of understanding, and the worship of the celestial bodies and their images to the ignorant, but I also asserted that the Veda actually prohibited the worship of any kind of figured beings by men of intellect and education. A few of the passages quoted by me in my former publication, on which this assertion rests, I also beg leave to repeat.

"He who worships any God except the Supreme Being, and thinks that he himself is distinct and inferior to that God, knows nothing, and is considered a domestic beast of these gods." "A state even so high as that of Brahma, does not afford real bliss." "Adore God alone. None but the Supreme Being is to be worshipped; nothing excepting him should be adored by a wise man." I repeat also the following text of the Vedanta: "The declaration of the Veda, that those that worship the celestial gods are the food of such gods, is an allegorical expression, and only means that they are comforts to the celestial gods, as food to mankind; for he who has no faith in the "Supreme Being, is rendered subject to these gods; the Veda affirms 'the same.' No reply therefore is, I presume, required of me by the arguments adduced by the learned Brahman in his treatise for idol-worship; except that I should offer some additional authorities, confirming exclusively the rational worship of the true God, and prohibiting the worship of the celestial figures and their images. I beg leave accordingly to quote, in the first instance, a few texts of the Veda: "Men may acquire eternal beatitude, by obtaining a knowledge of the Supreme Being alone; there is no other way to salvation." "To those that acquire a knowledge of Him, the Ruler of the intellectual power, who is eternal amidst the perishable universe, and is the source of sensation among all animate existences, and who alone assigns to so many objects their respective purposes, everlasting beatitude is allotted; but not to those who are not possessed of that knowledge."† And in the 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th texts of the Kenopanishad, the Veda has, five times successively, denied the divinity of any specific being which men in general worship; and has affirmed the divinity of that Being solely, who is beyond description and comprehension, and out of the reach of the power of vision, and of the sense of hearing or of smelling. The most celebrated Sankaracharya, in his commentary upon these texts, states that, lest people should suppose Vishnu, Mahadeva, Payama, Indra, or any other, to be a supreme spirit, the Veda in this passage disavows positively the divinity of all of them. Again, the Veda says: "Those that neglect the contemplation of the Supreme Spirit, either by devoting themselves solely to the performance of the ceremonies of religion, or by living destitute of religious ideas, shall, after death, assume the state of demons, such as that of the celestial gods, and of other created beings, which are surrounded with the darkness of ignorance."‡ It will not, I hope, be supposed inconsistent with the subject in question to mention in this place in what manner the Vedanta treats of these celestial gods, and how the Veda classes them among the other beings. The Vedanta (ch. 1st, s. 3rd, t. 26th) has the following passage: "Vyasa affirms that it is prescribed also to celestial gods and heavenly beings to attain a knowledge of the Supreme Being, because a desire of absorption is equally possible for them." And the Veda, in the Mundaka Upanishad, thus declares: "From

From Him (the Supreme Being) celestial gods* of many descriptions, Siddhas or beings next to celestial gods, mankind, beasts, birds, life, wheat, and barley, all are produced." In the Devi Mahatmya, a work which is as much in circulation among the Hindoos as their daily prayerbook,† (ch. 1st, t. 66th) the creation of Vishnu, Brahma, and Mahadeva, is most distinctly affirmed.

Manu, the best of all the commentators of the Vedas, says (chap. 12th, text 85th) : "Of all those duties, answered Bhrigu, the principal is to acquire from the Upanishad a true knowledge of the one Supreme Spirit, that is, the most exalted of all sciences, because through that knowledge eternal beatitude is obtained." And the same author, in the conclusion of his work on rites and ceremonies, thus directs (t. 92nd, ch. 12th) : "Thus must the chief of the twice-born, though he neglect the ceremonial rites mentioned in the Sastras, be diligent in attaining a knowledge of God, in controlling his organs of sense, and in repeating the Veda." In the Kularnava, "absorption is not to be effected by the studies of the Vedas nor by the reading of other Sastras : absorption is effected by a true knowledge of the Supreme Being. O! Parvati, except that knowledge there is no other way to absorption." "Caste or religious order belonging to each sect, is not calculated to be the cause of eternal beatitude, nor is the study of Darsanas or any other Sastras, sufficient to produce absorption : a knowledge of the Supreme Spirit is alone the cause of eternal beatitude." Mahanirvana : "He who believes that from the highest state of Brahma to the lowest state of a straw, all are delusions, and that the one Supreme Spirit is the only true being, attains beatitude." "Those who believe that the divine nature exists in any image made of earth, stones, metal, wood, or of other materials, reap only distress by their austerities ; but they cannot, without a knowledge of the Supreme Spirit, acquire absorption."

* The Veda, having in the first instance personified all the attributes and powers of the Deity, and also the celestial bodies and natural elements, does, in conformity to this idea of personification, treat of them in the subsequent passages as if they were real beings, ascribing to them birth, animation, senses, and accidents, as well as liability to annihilation.

† Puja Patal.

I am really sorry to observe that, notwithstanding these authorities and a thousand others of a similar nature, the learned Brahman appears altogether unimpressed by the luminous manner in which they inculcate the sublime simple spiritual belief in, and worship of, one God, and that, on the contrary, he should manifest so much zeal in leading people into an idolatrous belief in the divinity of created and perishable beings.

Idolatry, as now practised by our countrymen, and which the learned Brahman so zealously supports as conducive to morality, is not only rejected by the Sastras universally, but must also be looked upon with great horror by common sense, as leading directly to immorality and destructive of social comforts. For every Hindu who devotes himself to this absurd worship, constructs for that purpose a couple of male and female idols, sometimes indecent in form, as representatives of his favourite deities; he is taught and enjoined from his infancy to contemplate and repeat the history of these, as well as of their fellow-deities, though the actions ascribed to them be only a continued series of debauchery, sensuality, falsehood, ingratitude, breach of trust, and treachery to friends.⁹ There can be but one opinion respecting the moral conduct to be expected of a person, who has been brought up with sentiments of reverence to such beings, who refreshes his memory relative to them almost every day, and who has been persuaded to believe, that a repetition of the holy name of one of these deities,[†] or a trifling present to his image or to his devotee, is sufficient, not only to purify and free him from all crimes^{*} whatsoever, but to procure to him future beatitude.

As to the custom or practice to which the learned Brahman so often refers in defence of idolatry, I have already, I presume, explained in the Preface of the Isopanishad, the accidental circumstances which have caused idol-worship to flourish throughout the greater part of India; but, as the learned Brahman has not condescended to notice any of my remarks on this subject, I beg leave to repeat here a part of them.

"Many learned Brahmins are perfectly aware of the absurdity of idolatry, and are well informed of the nature of the pure mode of divine worship; but as in the rites, ceremonies, and festivals of idolatry they find the source of their comforts and fortune, they am afraid it will be found to rest on so slender a footing, that its doctrines will hardly be worth discussion.

In p. 24, l. 10, the learned Brahman states that "The Vedanta" itself, in treating of the several deities, declares them to be possessed "of forms, and their actions and enjoyments are all dependent on their corporeal nature." But (p. 21, l. 19) he says: "Because the male and female deities, whose beings I contend for, are nothing more than accidents existing in the Supreme Being."

He thus at one time considers these deities as possessed of a corporeal nature, and at another declares them to be mere accidents in God, which is quite inconsistent with the attribute of corporeality. I am really at a loss to understand, how the learned Brahman could admit so dark a contradiction into his "Lunar light of the Vedanta."

The learned Brahman (in p. 27, l. 6) thus assimilates the worship of the Supreme Being to that of an earthly king, saying: "Let us drop the discourse concerning a Supreme and Invisible Being. Take an earthly king. It is evident that to serve him there must be the medium of materiality. Can service to him be accomplished otherwise than by attendance on his person, praising his qualities, or some similar method?" Those who believe God to be an almighty, omniscient, and independent existence, which, pervading the universe, is deficient in nothing; and also know the feeble and dependent nature of earthly kings, as liable to sudden ruin, as harassed by incessant cares and wants, ought never, I presume, to assimilate the contemplation of the Almighty power with any corporeal service acceptable to an earthly king. But as by means of this analogy, the learned Brahman and his brethren have successfully persuaded their followers to make in imitation of presents and bribes offered to princes, pecuniary vows to these supposed deities, to which it would seem none but the learned Brahman and his brethren have exclusive claim,—and as such analogy has thus become the source of their comforts and livelihood, I shall say no more upon so tender a subject.

He further observes (in p. 22, l. 27): "In reverting to the subject, you affirm, that you admit the existence of matter in human beings, because it is evident to your senses; but deny it with respect to God, because it is not evident to your senses," &c.; and, "if this be your method of reasoning, it would appear that your faith is "confined to those objects only which are evident to your senses." As far as my recollection goes with respect to the contents of my publications, both in the native language and in English, I believe I never denied the materiality of God, on the mere ground of its not being evident to our senses. The assertion which I quoted, or made use of in my former treatise, is, that the nature of the God-head is beyond the comprehension of external and internal senses; which, I presume, implies neither the denial of the materiality of God, on the sole ground of his being invisible, nor the limitation of my faith merely to objects evident to the senses. For many things that far surpass the limits of our senses to perceive, or experience to teach, may yet be rendered credible, or even demonstrated by inferences drawn from our experience. Such as the mutual gravitation of the earth and moon towards each other, and of both to the sun; which facts cannot be perceived by any of our senses, but may be clearly demonstrated by reasoning drawn from our experience. Hence it appears, that a thing is justly denied only when found contrary to sense and reason, and not merely because it is not perceptible to the senses.

I have now to notice the friendly advice given me by the learned Brahman (in p. 23, l. 16): "But at all events, divest yourself of the uneasy sensations you profess to experience at witnessing the worship paid to idols, prepared at the expense and labour of another." In thanking him for his trouble in offering me this counsel, I must, however, beg the learned Brahman to excuse me, while I acknowledge myself unable to follow it; and that for several reasons. 1st. A feeling for the misery and distress of his fellow-creatures is, to every one not overpowered by selfish motives, I presume, rather natural than optional. 2ndly. I, as one of their countrymen, and ranked in the most religious sect, of course participate in the disgrace and ridicule to which they have subjected themselves, in defiance of their scriptural authority, by the worship of idols, very often under the most shameful forms, accompanied with the foulest language, and most indecent hymns and gestures. 3rdly. A sense of the duty which one man owes to another, compels me to exert my utmost endeavours to rescue them from imposition and servitude, and promote their comfort and happiness.

He further observes (p. 30, l. 16). "In the like manner, the King of kings is served equally by those worshippers who are acquainted with His real essence, and by those who only recognize

[illegible][illegible]

He further says (p. 31, l. 32): "If any one assert that the case is otherwise, that the deities, mankind, the heavens, and other objects have an existence independent of God, that faith in him is sufficient without worship, that they (the deities) cannot meet with reverence, how can that person affect to disbelieve the doctrine of independent existence, or assert that he is a believer in universality or a follower of the Vedanta?" To acquit myself from such gross but unfounded accusation as that of my believing material existence to be independent of God, I repeat a few passages from the abridgment of the Vedanta. (P. 10, l. 29): "Nothing bears true existence excepting God." Again in l. 31, "The existence of whatever thing that appears to us, relies on the existence of God." Besides, there is not, I am confident, a single assertion in the whole of my publications, from which the learned Brahman might justly infer that I believed in the independent existence of deities, mankind, the heavens, or other objects. The public, by an examination of these works, will be enabled to judge how far the learned Brahman has ventured to brave public opinion, in the invention of arguments for the defence of idolatry.

He again says (p. 34, l. 28): "If, by the practice of the prescribed forms in a church, a temple, or a mosque, God be worshipped how can he be dishonoured by being worshipped under the form of an image, however manufactured?" Those who contemplate God in a church or a mosque, or elevate their minds to a notion of the Almighty Power in any other appropriated place, for the sake of good example, never pay divine homage to those places; but those that pretend to worship God under the form of an image, consider it to be possessed of divine nature, and at the same time, most inconsistently, as imbued with immoral principles. Moreover, the promoters of the worship of images, by promulgating anecdotes illustrative of the supposed divine power of particular idols, endeavour to excite the reverence of the people, and specially of pilgrims, who, under these superstitious ideas, are persuaded to propitiate them with large sacrifices of money, and sometimes even by that of their own lives. Having so far entered into this subject, the learned Brahman will, I hope, be convinced of the impropriety of the analogy which he has drawn between a worship within a certain material object and a worship of a material object.

As to his question (p. 34, l. 32), "Is the sight of the image unpleasing?" My answer must be affirmative. It is extremely natural that, to a mind whose purity is not corrupted by a degrading superstition, the sight of images which are often of the most hedious or indecent description, and which must therefore excite disgust in the mind of the spectator, should be unpleasing. A visit to Kalighat,* or Burahnugur,† which are only four miles distant from Calcutta, will sufficiently convince the reader of the unpleasant nature of their beloved images. He again asks in the same page, (l. 33): "Will a beloved friend be treated with disrespect by being seated on a chair, when he arrives in your house, or by being presented with fragrant flowers and other offerings?" To which I shall say, no; but at the same time I must assert that a friend worthy of reverence would not, we may be sure, be at all pleased at being exhibited sometimes in a form,‡ the bare mention of which would be considered as a gross insult to the decorous feelings of the public; and sometimes in the shape of a monkey,§ fish,|| hog,¶ or elephant, or at being represented as destitute of every virtue, and altogether abandoned. Nor would he believe his host to be possessed of common sense, who, as a token of regard, would altogether neglect his guest, to go and lay fruits and flowers before his picture.

It is said (p. 39, l. 23): "In the accounts of ancient Greece we meet with the worship of idols, and the practice of austerities; but these acts have been contemned by the more enlightened moderns." I am really glad to observe that the learned Brahman, more liberally and plainly than could be expected, confesses that idolatry will be totally contemned as soon as the understanding is improved. I, however, beg leave to remark on this instance, that though the idolatry practised by the Greeks and Romans was certainly just as impure, absurd, and puerile as that of the present Hindoos, yet the former was by no means so destructive of the comforts of life, or injurious to the texture of society, as the latter. The present Hindoo idolatry being made to consist in following certain modes and restraints of diet (which according to the authorities of the Mahabharata and other histories were never observed by their forefathers), has subjected its unfortunate votaries to entire separation from the rest of the world, and also from each other, and to constant inconveniences and distress.

A Hindoo, for instance, who affects particular purity,* cannot even partake of food dressed by his own brother, when invited to his house, and if touched by him while eating, he must throw away the remaining part of his meal. In fact, owing to the observance of such peculiar idolatry, directly contrary to the authorities of their scripture, they hardly deserve the name of social beings.

The learned Brahman further says (p. 23, l. 3): "If you affirm that you are not an infidel, but that your arguments are in conformity with those of the philosophers who were ignorant of the Vedas," &c. A remark of this kind cannot, I am sure, be considered as at all applicable to a person who has subjected himself to this writer's remarks only by translating and publishing the principal parts of the Veda, and by vindicating the Vedanta theology, and who never advanced on religious controversy any argument which was not founded upon the authorities of the Vedas and their celebrated commentators. It is, however, remarkable that, although the learned Brahman and his brethren frequently quote the name of the Vedas and other Sastras, both in writing and in verbal discussion, they pay little or no attention in practice to their precepts, even in the points of the most important nature, a few of which I beg leave to notice here.

1st. The adoration of the invisible Supreme Being, although exclusively prescribed by the Upanishads, or the principal parts of the Vedas, and also by the Vedanta, has been totally neglected, and even discountenanced, by the learned Brahman and his followers, the idol-worship, which those authorities permit only to the ignorant, having been substituted for that pure worship.

2ndly. Angira and Vishnu, and also the modern Raghunandana, authorize a widow to burn herself voluntarily along with the corpse of her husband; but modern Brahmins, in direct opposition to their authority, allow her relations to bind the mournful and infatuated widow to the funeral pile with ropes and bamboos, as soon as she has expressed a wish to perform the dreadful funeral sacrifice, to which the Brahmins lend a ready assistance.

3rdly. Although an acceptance of money or of a present in the marriage contract of a daughter is most strictly prohibited by the Vedas and by Manu (texts 98 and 100 of chap. 9), yet the sale of female children under pretence of marriage is practised by nearly two-thirds of the Brahmans of Bengal and Tirhoot, as well as by their followers generally.

4thly. Yajnavalkya has authorized the second marriage of a man, while his former wife is living ; but only under certain circumstances of misconduct or misfortune in the latter, such as the vice of drinking wine, of deception, of extravagance, of using disagreeable language, or shewing manifest dislike towards her husband, long protracted and incurable illness, barrenness, or producing only female offspring. In defiance, however, of this restraint, some of them marry thirty or forty women, either for the sake of money got with them at marriage, or to gratify brutal inclinations. Madhosingh, the late Rajah of Tirhoot, through compassion towards that helpless sex, limited, I am told, within these thirty or forty years, the Brahmans of that district to four wives only. This regulation, although falling short both of the written law and of that of reason, tends to alleviate in some measure the misery to which women were before exposed, as well as to diminish in some degree domestic strife and disturbance.

The learned Brahman objects to the term indescribable, although universally assigned to the Supreme Being by the Veda and by the Vedanta theology, saying (p. 37, l. 20), "It is a wonderful interpretation of the Vedanta to say that God is indescribable, although existing, unless indeed he be looked upon as the production of magic ; as existing in one sense, and non-existent in another." And again (l. 14), "He, therefore, who asserts that the Supreme Being is indescribable and at the same time existing, must conceive that He, like the world, is mutable," &c.,—in answer to which I beg to refer the learned Brahman to the 11th text of the third Brahmana of the 4th chapter of the Brihadaranyaka, the principal part of the Yajur Veda, as commented upon by the celebrated Sankaracharya: "The Veda "having so far described God, by various absolute* and relative "epithets,† was convinced of its incapability of giving a real "description of the nature of the Godhead: language can convey a "notion of things only either by the appellations by which they are "already known, or by describing their figure, accidents, genus, and "properties; but God has none of these physical circumstances: the "Veda therefore attempted to explain him in negative terms;" (that is by declaring that whatever thing may be perceived by the mental faculties, or the external senses, is not God.) "The Veda's "ascribing to God attributes of eternity, wisdom, truth, &c., shews "that it can explain him only by ascribing those attributes, and "applying those epithets that are held by men in the highest estimation, without intending to assert the adequacy of such description. "He is the only true existence amidst all dependent existences, and "the true source of our senses." Also in the 3rd text of the Kenopanishad; "Hence no vision can approach him; no language can "describe him; no intellectual power can compass or determine him. "We know nothing of how the Supreme Being should be explained: "He is beyond nature, which is above comprehension: our ancient "spiritual parents have thus explained Him to us." It cannot, however, be inferred, from our acknowledged ignorance of the nature and attributes of the Supreme Being, that we are equally ignorant as to His existence. The wonderful structure and growth of even so trifling an object as a leaf of a tree, affords proof of an almighty Superintendent of the universe; and even the physical world affords numerous instances of things whose existence is quite evident to our senses, but of whose nature we can form no conception; such as the causes of the sensations of heat and vision.

The learned Brahman attempts to prove the impossibility of an adoration of the Deity, saying (p. 33, l. 15): "That which cannot be conceived, cannot be worshipped." Should the learned Brahman consider a full conception of the nature, essence, or qualities of the Supreme Being, or a physical picture truly representing the Almighty power, with offerings of flowers, leaves, and viands, as essential to adoration, I agree with the learned Brahman with respect to the impossibility of the worship of God. But, should adoration imply only the elevation of the mind to the conviction of the existence of the Omnipresent Deity, as testified by His wise and wonderful works, and continual contemplation of His power as so displayed, together with a constant sense of the gratitude which we naturally owe Him, for our existence, sensation, and comfort,—I never will hesitate to assert, that His adoration is not only possible, and practicable, but even incumbent upon every rational creature. For further explanation, I refer the learned Brahman to the text 47, sect. 4, chap. 3, of the Vedanta.

* As eternal, true and intelligent.

To his question,* “What are you yourselves?” I suppose I may safely reply for myself, that I am a poor dependent creature—subject, in common with others, to momentary changes, and liable to sudden destruction.

At p. 45, l. 30, the learned Brahman, if I rightly understand his object, means to insinuate, that I have adopted the doctrines of those who deny the responsibility of man as a moral agent. I am quite at a loss to conceive from what part of my writings this inference has been drawn, as I have not only never entertained such opinions myself, but have taken pains to explain the passage in the Veda on which this false doctrine is founded. In page 69 of the Preface to the Isopanishad, I have said that, “the Vedanta by declaring that “God is everywhere, and every thing is in God, means that nothing “is absent from God, and that nothing bears real existence except by “the volition of God.” And again, in the same page I quoted the example of the most revered teachers of the Vedanta doctrine, who, “although they declared their faith in the Omnipresent God, according to the doctrines of the Vedanta, assigned to every creature the “particular character and respect he was entitled to.”

I omitted to notice the strange mode of argument which the learned Brahman (at p. 29) has adopted in defence of idolatry. After acknowledging that the least deficiency in judgment renders man incapable of looking up to an Omnipresent Supreme Being, whereby he mistakes a created object for the great Creator, he insinuates that an erroneous notion in this respect is as likely to lead to eternal happiness, as a knowledge of truth. At l. 5, he says : “And “although a person through deficiency in judgment, should be unable

"to discover the real nature of a thing, does it follow, that his error will prevent the natural effect from appearing? When a man in a dream sees a tiger, is he not in as much alarm as if he saw it in reality?"

This mode of claiming for idol-worship a value equal to that of pure religion, which it can never be admitted to possess, may have succeeded in retaining some of his followers in the delusive dream, from which he is so anxious that they should not be awake. But some of them have, I know, begun to inquire into the truth of those notions in which they have been instructed; and these are not likely to mistake for true, the false analogy that is in the above passage attempted to be drawn, nor will they believe that, however powerful may be the influence of imagination, even under false impressions, future happiness, which depends on God alone, can ever be ranked amongst its effects. Such enquirers will, I hope, at last become sensible that the system of dreaming recommended by the learned Brahman, however essential to the interests of himself and of his caste, can bring to them no advantage, either substantial or eternal.

As instances of the erroneous confidence which is placed in the repetition of the name of a god to effect purification from sins, noticed by me in p. 168, I may quote the following passages.

"He who pronounces "Doorga" (the name of the goddess), though he constantly practise adultery, plunder others of their property, or commit the most heinous crimes, is freed from all sins."^{*}

"A person pronouncing loudly, "reverence to Hari," even involuntarily, in the state of falling down, slipping, of labouring under illness, or of sneezing, purifies himself from the foulest crimes.[†]"

"He who contemplates the Ganges, while walking, sitting, sleeping, thinking of other things, awake, eating, breathing, and conversing, is delivered from sins.[‡]"

The circumstances alluded to in p. 168 of this treatise, relative to the wicked conduct of their supposed deities, are perfectly familiar to every individual Hindoo. But those Europeans who are not acquainted with the particulars related of them, may perhaps feel a wish to be in possession of them. I, therefore, with a view to gratify their curiosity and to vindicate my assertion, beg to be allowed to mention a few instances in point, with the authorities on which they rest. As I have already noticed the debauchery of Krishna, and his gross sensuality, and that of his fellow-deities, such as Siva and Brahma, in the 147th, 148th and 150th pages of my reply to the observations of Sankar Sastri, instead of repeating them here, I refer my readers to that reply, also to the tenth division of the Bhagavata, to the Harivansa or last division of the Maha-Bharata, and to the Nigams, as well as to the several Agams, which give a detailed account of their lewdness and debauchery. As to falsehood, their favourite deity Krishna is more conspicuous than the rest. Jara-Sandha, a powerful prince of Behar, having heard of the melancholy murder of his son-in-law perpetrated by Krishna, harrassed, and at last drove him out of the place of his nativity (Mathura) by frequent military expeditions. Krishna, in revenge, resolved to deprive that prince of his life by fraud, and in a most unjustifiable manner. To accomplish his object, he and his two cousins, Bhima and Arjuna, declared themselves to be Brahmans and in that disguise entered his palace; where, finding him weakened by a religious fast, and surrounded only by his family and priests, they challenged him to fight a duel. He accordingly fought Bhima, the strongest of the three, who conquered and put him to death.—Vide Sabha Parba or second Book of the Maha-Bharata. Krishna again persuaded Yudhisthira, his cousin, to give false evidence in order to accomplish the murder of Drona, their spiritual father.—Vide Drona Parba, or seventh Book of the Maha-Bharata.

Vishnu and others combined in a conspiracy against Bali, a mighty emperor; but finding his power irresistible, that deity was determined to ruin him by stratagem, and for that purpose appeared to him in the shape of a dwarf, begging alms. Notwithstanding Bali was warned of the intention of Vishnu, yet, impressed with a high sense of generosity, he could not refuse a boon to a beggar; that a grateful deity in return not only deprived him of his whole empire, which he put himself in possession of by virtue of the boon of Bali, but also inflicted on him the disgrace of bondage and confinement in Patal.—Vide latter part of the Hari-vansa or last book of the Maha-Bharata.

When the battle of Kurukshetra was decided by the fatal destruction of Duryodhana, the remaining part of the army of his rival, Yudhisthira, returned to the camp to rest during the night, under the personal care and protection of Mahadeva. That deity having, however, been cajoled by the flattery offered him by Aswatthama, one of the friends of the unfortunate Duryodhana, not only allowed him to destroy the whole army that was asleep under the confidence of his protection, but even assisted him with his sword to accomplish his bloody purpose.—Vide Saushuptika Parba, or eleventh book of the Maha-Bharata.

When the Asuras, at the churning of the ocean, gave the pitcher of the water of immortality in charge to Vishnu, he betrayed his trust by delivering it to their step-brothers and enemies, the celestial gods.—Vide first book or Adi Parba of the Maha-Bharata.

Instances like these might be multiplied beyond number: and crimes of a much deeper dye might easily be added to the list, were I not unwilling to stain these pages by making them the vehicle of such stories of immorality and vice. May God speedily purify the minds of my countrymen from the corruptness which such tales are too apt to produce, and lead their hearts to that pure morality which is inseparable from the true worship of Him!

AN APOLOGY FOR THE PURSUIT OF FINAL BEATITUDE.

SUBRAHMANYA SASTRI, a diligent observer of Brahmanical tenets, wishing to prove that those Brahmans who do not study the Vedas with their subordinate sciences, are degraded from the rank of Brahmanism, prepared and offered an Essay on that subject to the Brahmans of the province of Bengal, who are generally deficient in those studies. In this, he has advanced three assertions: which, however, have no tendency to establish his position. He alleges 1st, that, "to a person not acquainted with the Vedas, neither temporary "heavenly enjoyments, nor eternal beatitude, can be allotted." 2ndly, that, "he only who has studied the Vedas is authorized to "seek the knowledge of God;" and 3rdly, that "men must perform "without omission all the rites and duties prescribed in the Vedas "and Smritis before acquiring a thorough knowledge of God." On these positions he attempts to establish, that the performance of the duties and rites prescribed by the Sastras for each class according to their religious order, such as the study of the Vedas and the offering of sacrifices, &c., is absolutely necessary towards the acquisition of a knowledge of God. We consequently take upon ourselves to offer in our own defence the following remarks, in answer to those assertions.

We admit that it is proper in men to observe the duties and rites prescribed by the Sastra for each class according to their religious order, in acquiring knowledge respecting God, such observance being conducive to that acquisition, an admission which is not inconsistent with the authorities of the Vedas and other Sastras. But we can by no means admit the necessity of observing those duties and rites as indispensable steps towards attaining divine knowledge, which the learned Sastri pronounces them to be; for the great Vyasa, in his work of the Vedanta Darsana, or the explanation of the spiritual parts of the Vedas, justifies the attainment of the knowledge of God, even by those who never practise the prescribed duties and rites, as appears from the following two passages of Vyasa in the same

Darsana. "Antarachapi tu taddrishteh,"—"Apicha smaryate." The celebrated Sankar-Acharya thus comments upon those two texts: "As to the question, Whether such men as have not the sacred fire, or are afflicted with poverty, who profess no religious order whatsoever, and who do not belong to any caste, are authorized to seek divine knowledge or not? On a superficial view, it appears, that they are not permitted to make such attainments, as the duties prescribed for each class are declared to lead to divine knowledge, and to those duties they are altogether strangers. Such doubt having arisen, the great Vyasa thus decides: Even a person who professes no religious order, is permitted to acquire a knowledge of God, for it is found in the Vedas that Raikya, Bachaknavi, and others, who, like them, did not belong to any class, obtained divine knowledge. It is also mentioned in the sacred tradition, that Samvarta and others, living naked and totally independent of the world, who practised no prescribed duties, assumed the rank of the highest devotees." Besides the texts of the Veda, such as "Tayorha Maitreyi Brahmabadini," &c., and "Atma va are", &c., show that Maitreyi and others, who, being women, had not the option of studying the Veda, were, notwithstanding, qualified to acquire divine knowledge; and in the Smriti as well as in the Commentary of the celebrated Sankar-Acharya Sulabha and other women are styled knowers of the Supreme Being. Also Bidur, Dharmahyadha, and others of the fourth class, attained the knowledge of God without having an opportunity of studying the Vedas. All this we find in the sacred traditions: hence those who have a thorough knowledge of the Vedas and Smritis, can pay no deference to the opinion maintained by the learned Sastri, that those only who have studied the Vedas are qualified to acquire the knowledge of God. Moreover, to remove all doubt as to Sudras and others being capable of attaining Divine knowledge without the assistance of the Vedas, the celebrated Commentator, in illustrating the text "Sravanadhyana," &c., asserts, that "the authority of the Smriti, stating that 'to all the four classes preaching should be offered,' &c., shews that to the sacred traditions, and to the Puranas, and also to the Agams, all the four classes have equally access," thus establishing that the sacred traditions, Puranas, and Agams without distinction, can impart divine knowledge to mankind at large. From the decided opinion of Vyasa, and from the precedents given by the Vedas and sacred traditions, and also from the conclusive verdict of the most revered Commentator, those who entertain respect for those authorities, will not admit the study of the Vedas and other duties required of each class to be the only means of acquiring knowledge of God. Hence the sacred tradition, stating that a person, by studying the Gita alone, had acquired final beatitude, stands unshaken; and also the positive declaration of the great Mahadeva with regard to the authentic and well-accepted Agam Sastras, as being the means of imparting divine knowledge to those who study them, will not be treated as inconsequential. If the spiritual part of the Vedas can enable men to acquire salvation by teaching them the true and eternal existence of God, and the false and perishable being of the universe, and inducing them to hear and constantly reflect on those doctrines, it is consistent with reason to admit, that the Smriti, and Agam, and other works, inculcating the same doctrines, afford means of attaining final beatitude. What should we say more?

RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTIONS

FOUNDED ON SACRED AUTHORITIES.

The following Treatise, in the form of questions and answers, contains a brief account of the worship enjoined in the sacred writings, as due to that Being who is pure as well as eternal, and to whose existence Nature gives testimony; that the faithful may easily understand and become successful in the practice of this worship. The proof of each doctrine may be found, according to the figures, in the end of the work.

As this subject is almost always expounded, in the sacred writings, by means of questions and answers, that it may be more easily comprehended, a similar plan is adopted in this place also.

1 Question.—What is meant by worship?

Answer.—Worship implies the act of one with a view to please another; but when applied to the Supreme Being, it signifies a contemplation of his attributes.

2 Q.—To whom is worship due?

A.—To the AUTHOR and Governor of the universe, which is incomprehensibly formed, and filled with an endless variety of men and things; in which, as shown by the zodiac, in a manner far more wonderful than the machinery of a watch, the sun, the moon, the planets and the stars perform their rapid courses; and which is fraught with animate and inanimate matter of various kinds, locomotive and immoveable, of which there is not one particle but has its functions to perform.

3 Q.—What is he?

A.—We have already mentioned that he is to be worshipped, who is the Author and Governor of the universe; yet, neither the sacred writings nor logical argument, can define his nature.

4 Q.—Are there no means of defining him?

A.—It is repeatedly declared in the sacred writings, that he cannot be defined either by the intellect or by language. This appears from inference also; for, though the universe is visible, still no one can ascertain its form or extent. How then can we define the Being whom we designate as its Author and Governor?

5 Q.—Is any one, on sufficient grounds, opposed to this worship?

A.—To this worship no one can be opposed on sufficient grounds; for, as we all worship the Supreme Being, adoring him as the Author and Governor of the universe, it is impossible for any one to object to such worship; because each person considers the object whom he worships as the Author and Governor of the universe; therefore, in accordance with his own faith, he must acknowledge that this worship is his own. In the same manner, they, who consider Time or Nature, or any other Object, as the Governor of the universe, even they cannot be opposed to this worship, as bearing in mind the Author and Governor of the universe. And in China, in Tartary, in Europe, and in all other countries, where so many sects exist, all believe the object whom they adore to be the Author and Governor of the universe; consequently, they also must acknowledge, according to their own faith, that this our worship is their own.

6 Q.—In some places in the sacred writings it is written that the Supreme Being is imperceptible and unexpressible; and in others, that he is capable of being known. How can this be reconciled?

A.—Where it is written that he is imperceptible and undefinable, it is meant, that his likeness cannot be conceived; and where it is said that he is capable of being known, his mere existence is referred to, that is, that there is a God, as the indescribable creation and government of this universe clearly demonstrate: in the same manner, as by the action of a body, we ascertain the existence of a spirit therein called the sentient soul, but the form or likeness of that spirit which pervades every limb and guides the body, we know not.

7 Q.—Are you hostile to any other worship?

A.—Certainly not; for, he who worships, be it whomsoever or whatsoever it may, considers that object as the Supreme Being, or as an object containing him; consequently, what cause have we to be hostile to him?

8 Q.—If you worship the Supreme Being, and other persons offer their adoration to the same Divine Being, but in a different form; what then is the difference between them and you?

A.—We differ in two ways; first, they worship under various forms and in particular places, believing the object of their worship to be the Supreme Being; but we declare that he, who is the Author of the universe, is to be worshipped ; besides this, we can determine no particular form or place. Secondly, we see that they who worship under any one particular form, are opposed to those who worship under another ; but it is impossible for worshippers of any denomination to be opposed to us ; as we have shown in the answer to the 5th question.

9 Q.—In what manner is this worship to be performed ?

A.—By bearing in mind that the Author and Governor of this visible universe is the Supreme Being, and comparing this idea with the sacred writings and with reason. In this worship it is indispensably necessary to use exertions to subdue the senses, and to read such passages as direct attention to the Supreme Spirit. Exertion to subdue the senses, signifies an endeavour to direct the will and the senses, and the conduct in such a manner as not only to prevent our own or others' ill, but to secure our own and others' good ; in fact, what is considered injurious to ourselves, should be avoided towards others. It is obvious that as we are so constituted, that without the help of sound we can conceive no idea ; therefore, by means of the texts treating of the Supreme Being, we should contemplate him. The benefits which we continually receive from fire, from air, and from the sun, likewise from the various productions of the earth, such as the different kinds of grain, drugs, fruits and vegetables, all are dependent on him : and by considering and reasoning on the terms expressive of such ideas, the meaning itself is firmly fixed in the mind. It is repeatedly said in the sacred writings, that theological knowledge is dependent upon truth ; consequently, the attainment of truth will enable us to worship the Supreme Being, who is Truth itself.

10 Q.—According to this worship, what rule must we establish with regard to the regulation of our food, conduct, and other worldly matters ?

A.—It is proper to regulate our food and conduct agreeably to the sacred writings ; therefore, he who follows no prescribed form among all those that are promulgated, but regulates his food and conduct according to his own will, is called self-willed ; and to act according to our own wish, is opposed both by the Scriptures and by reason. In the Scriptures it is frequently forbidden. Let us examine it by reason. Suppose each person should, in non-conformity with prescribed form, regulate his conduct according to his own desires, a speedy end must ensue to established societies; for to the self-willed, food, whether fit to be eaten or not, conduct proper or improper, desires lawful or unlawful, all are the same; he is guided by no rule: to him an action, performed according to the will, is faultless: but the will of all is not alike; consequently, in the fulfilment of our desires, where numerous opinions are mutually opposed, a quarrel is the most likely consequence; and the probable result of repeated quarrels is the destruction of human beings. In fact, however, it is highly improper to spend our whole time in judging of the propriety and impropriety of certain foods, without reflecting on science or Divine truth; for be food of whatever kind it may, in a very short space of time it undergoes a change into what is considered exceedingly impure, and this impure matter is, in various places, productive of different kinds of grain; therefore, it is certainly far more preferable to adorn the mind than to think of purifying the belly.

11 Q.—In the performance of this worship, is any particular place, quarter, or time, necessary?

A.—A suitable place is certainly preferable, but it is not absolutely necessary; that is to say, in whatever place, towards whatever quarter, or at whatever time the mind is best at rest,—that place, that quarter, and that time is the most proper for the performance of this worship.

12 Q.—To whom is this worship fit to be taught?

A.—It may be taught to all, but effect being produced in each person according to his state of mental preparation, it will be proportionably successful.

THE MISSIONARY AND THE BRAHMUN BEING A VINDICATION OF THE HINDOO RELIGION AGAINST THE ATTACKS OF CHRISTIAN MISSIONARIES.

PREFACE

TO THE FIRST EDITION.

For a period of upwards of fifty years, this country (Bengal) has been in exclusive possession of the English nation ; during the first thirty years of which, from their word and deed, it was universally believed that they would not interfere with the religion of their subjects, and that they truly wished every man to act in such matters according to the dictates of his own conscience. Their possessions in Hindoostan and their political strength have, through the grace of God, gradually increased. But during the last twenty years, a body of English gentlemen, who are called missionaries, have been publicly endeavouring, in several ways to convert Hindoos and Mussulmans of this country into Christianity. The first way is that of publishing and distributing among the natives various books, large and small, reviling both religions, and abusing and ridiculing the gods and saints of the former: the second way is that of standing in front of the doors of the natives or in the public roads to preach the excellency of their own religion and the debasedness of that of others: the third way is that if any natives of low origin become Christians from the desire of gain or from any other motives, these gentlemen employ and maintain them as a necessary encouragement to others to follow their example.

It is true that the apostles of Jesus Christ used to preach the superiority of the Christian religion to the natives of different countries. But we must recollect that they were not of the rulers of those countries where they preached. Were the missionaries likewise to preach the Gospel and distribute books in countries not conquered by the English, such as Turkey, Persia, &c., which are much nearer England, they would be esteemed a body of men truly zealous in propagating religion and in following the example of the founders of Christianity. In Bengal, where the English are the sole rulers, and where the mere name of Englishman is sufficient to frighten people, an encroachment upon the rights of her poor timid and humble inhabitants and upon their religion, cannot be viewed in the eyes of God or the public as a justifiable act. For wise and good men always feel disinclined to hurt those that are of much less strength than themselves, and if such weak creatures be dependent on them and subject to their authority, they can never attempt, even in thought, to mortify their feelings.

We have been subjected to such insults for about nine centuries, and the cause of such degradation has been our excess in civilization and abstinence from the slaughter even of animals; as well as our division into castes, which has been the source of want of unity among us.

It seems almost natural that when one nation succeeds in conquering another, the former, though their religion may be quite ridiculous, laugh at and despise the religion and manners of those that are fallen into their power. For example, Mussalmans, upon their conquest of India, proved highly inimical to the religious exercises of Hindoos. When the generals of Chungezkhan, who denied God and were like wild beasts in their manners, invaded the western part of Hindoostan, they universally mocked at the profession of God and of futurity expressed to them by the natives of India. The savages of Arracan, on their invasion of the eastern part of Bengal, always attempted to degrade the religion of Hindoos. In ancient days, the Greeks and the Romans, who were gross idolaters and immoral in their lives, used to laugh at the religion and conduct of their Jewish subjects, a sect who were devoted to the belief of one God. It is therefore not uncommon if the English missionaries, who are of the conquerors of this country, revile and mock at the religion of its natives. But as the English are celebrated for the manifestation of humanity and for administering justice, and as a great many gentlemen among them are noticed to have had an aversion to violate equity, it would tend to destroy their acknowledged character if they follow the example of the former savage conquerors in disturbing the established religion of the country; because to introduce a religion by means of abuse and insult, or by affording the hope of worldly gain, is inconsistent with reason and justice. If by the force of argument they can prove the truth of their own religion and the falsity of that of Hindoos, many would of course embrace their doctrines, and in case they fail to prove this, they should not undergo such useless trouble, nor tease Hindoos any longer by their attempts at conversion. In consideration of the small huts in which Brahmans of learning generally reside, and the simple food, such as vegetables, &c., which they are accustomed to eat, and the poverty which obliges them to live upon charity, the missionary gentlemen may not, I hope, abstain from controversy from contempt of them, for truth and true religion do not always belong to wealth and power, high names, or lofty palaces.

Now, in the Mission-press of Shreerampore a letter shewing the unreasonableness of all the Hindoo Sastras having appeared, I have inserted in the 1st and 2nd numbers of this magazine all the questions in the above letter as well as their answers, and afterwards the replies that may be made by both parties shall in like manner be published.

PREFACE

TO THE SECOND EDITION.

In giving the contents of the following pages to the world in a new edition, I think it necessary to prefix a short explanation of the origin of the controversy, and the manner in which it concluded. The BRAHMUNICAL MAGAZINE was commenced for the purpose of answering the objections against the Hindoo Religion contained in a Bengalee Weekly Newspaper, entitled "SAMACHAR DARPAN," conducted by some of the most eminent of the Christian Missionaries, and published at Shreerampore. In that paper of the 14th July, 1821, a letter was inserted containing certain doubts regarding the Sastras, to which the writer invited any one to favour him with an answer, through the same channel. I accordingly sent a reply in the Bengalee language, to which, however, the conductors of the work calling for it, refused insertion; and I therefore formed the resolution of publishing the whole controversy with an English translation in a work of my own "the BRAHMUNICAL MAGAZINE," now re-printed, which contains all that was written on both sides.

In the first number of the MAGAZINE I replied to the arguments they adduced against the Sastras, or immediate explanations of the Vedas, our original Sacred Books; and in the second I answered the objections urged against the Puranas and Tantras, or Historical Illustrations of the Hindoo Mythology, shewing that the doctrines of the former are much more rational than the religion which the Missionaries profess, and that those of the latter, if unreasonable, are not more so than their Christian Faith. To this the Missionaries made a reply in their work entitled the "FRIEND OF INDIA," No. 38, which was immediately answered by me in the 3rd No. of the MAGAZINE; and from the continuation of a regular controversy of this kind, I expected that in a very short time, the truth or fallacy of one or other of our religious systems would be clearly established; but to my great surprise and disappointment, the Christian Missionaries, after having provoked the discussion, suddenly abandoned it; and the 3rd No. of my MAGAZINE has remained unanswered for nearly two years. During that long period the Hindoo community (to whom the work was particularly addressed and therefore printed both in Bengalee and English) have made up their minds that the arguments of the BRAHMUNICAL MAGAZINE are unanswerable; and I now republish, therefore, only the English translation, that the learned among Christians, in Europe as well as in Asia, may form their opinion on the subject.

It is well-known to the whole world, that no people on earth are more tolerant than the Hindoos, who believe all men to be equally within the reach of Divine beneficence, which embraces the good of every religious sect and denomination: therefore it cannot be imagined that my object in publishing this Magazine was to oppose Christianity; but I was influenced by the conviction that persons who travel to a distant country for the purpose of overturning the opinions of its inhabitants and introducing their own, ought to be prepared to demonstrate that the latter are more reasonable than the former.

In conclusion, I beg to ask every candid and reflecting reader:—Whether a man be placed on an imperial throne, or sit in the dust—whether he be lord of the whole known world, or destitute of even a hut—the commander of millions, or without a single follower—whether he be intimately acquainted with all human learning, or ignorant of letters—whether he be ruddy and handsome, or dark and deformed—yet if while he declares that God is not man, he again professes to believe in a God-Man or Man-God, under whatever sophistry the idea may be sheltered,—can such a person have a just claim to enjoy respect in the intellectual world? And does he not expose himself to censure, should he, at the same time, ascribe unreasonableness to others?

THE LETTER ALLUDED TO

PUBLISHED IN THE

Samachar Darpan of the 14th July, 1821.

I beg to inform the learned Public of all countries that at present Calcutta is a seat of learning and of learned men, and perhaps there is no other place where doubts arising from the interpretation of the Sastras can be removed so well as in this metropolis. I therefore state a few questions methodically. It will gratify me, and do essential good to mankind, if any one favor me with replies thereto through the "SAMACHAR DARPAN"; for in answering them there will not be much labour and no expense whatever.

In the first place it appears from the perusal of the Vedanta Sastra, that God is one, eternal, unlimited by past, present, or future time, without form, beyond the apprehension of the senses, void of desires, pure intellect, without defect and perfect in every respect; and the soul is not different from him nor is there any other real existence besides him.

The visible world is, as it says, created by Maya alone; and that Maya is opposed to a true knowledge of God [i.e., after the acquisition of a knowledge of God, the effect of Maya, which is the universe, no longer continues to appear a real existence, in the same manner as when a piece of rope is mistaken for a snake, the misconceived existence of the snake is destroyed by a knowledge of the real existence of the rope, or as the palace of Gandharvas (a genus supposed to be inferior only to the celestial gods) seen in a dream ceases to appear immediately after the expiration of the dream]. The world and consciousness are both declared false; they appear as if they had real existence owing to ignorance of the nature of God. An admission of the truth of these doctrines either brings reproach upon God, or establishes the supremacy and eternity in some degree both of God and of Maya.

2ndly. If the soul be the same as God, nothing can justify the belief that the soul is liable to be rewarded and punished according to its good or evil works.

3rdly. From these doctrines the perfection of God and his sufficiency cannot be maintained.

This Sastra teaches also that as bubbles arise from and again are absorbed in water, in like manner through the influence of Maya the world repeatedly proceeds from, depends upon, and is absorbed into God. How can God be blameless if he is represented as a Being influenced by Maya in the creation of the world? The Veda declares, "The birth, continuation, and destruction of the world are effected by the Supreme Being." According to this, how can we admit the enjoyment of heaven and endurance of hell by the soul?

In the second place, the Nyaya Sastra says, that God is one and souls are various; they both are imperishable; and that space, position, and time as well as atoms are eternal; and it admits that the act of creating the world attaches to God in a peculiarly united relation called Samavaya, whereby the Deity is called the Creator of the world; and it says also that according to the good or evil works of the soul he rewards or punishes it, and that his will is immutable. These doctrines in fact deny to God the agency of the world; for according to them he appears, like us, to have created the world with the aid of materials; but in reality he is above the need of assistance. After admitting the immutability of the will of God, how can we be persuaded to believe that he creates, preserves and again destroys all things at different times and bestows on the soul the consequences of its works at successive times? From these doctrines why should we not consider God and the soul as gods, one of great authority and the other of less power, like two men, one possessed of greater energy than the other? These destroy totally the doctrine of the unity of God.

In the third place the Mimansa Sastra says that the wonderful consequences of the various sacrificial rites consisting of incantations composed of the Sanskrit language and of different offerings, are God. In this world among mankind there are various languages and many Sastras; and sacrificial articles and language both are insensible and in the power of men: they are, however, the cause of rites. How can we call God the consequences of the rites which are produced by men? Moreover, God is said by this Sastra to be mere rites, and at the same time one; but we see that rites are various: how can then God be proved one according to these doctrines? In a country where rites are performed through a language different from Sanskrit, why should not have been so long and tedious. The Patanjala Sastra is a treatise on Yoga, and is not a Sastra therefore it is, according to the usual mode of denoting the Sastras, the Yoga-Sastra.

In the Saṅkhya-Sastra, the Saṅkhya and the Yoga are not the God of nature are operating jointly, like the saṅkhya and the yoga of the Saṅkhya-Sastra, but the saṅkhya is the saṅkhya of the Saṅkhya-Sastra, and the yoga is the yoga of the Yoga-Sastra. How, according to these Saṅkhya and Yoga are considered one? Why do we not believe the duality of saṅkhya and yoga?

The remaining part of the letter is to be inserted in the next number of this magazine.

Reply to the above letter, to which reply the Editor of the Samachar Darpan denied insertion.

I observed in the 'Samachar Darpan' of the 14th July, 1821, sent me by a respectable native, an attempt of some saṅkhya though misinformed person to show the absurdity of all the Hindu Sastras and thereby to deprive their authority. The necessary gentleman had before been in the habit of making these attempts only in discourses with the natives or through saṅkhya and yoga with that view. But now they have begun to do so in the medium of a newspaper. I have not, however, felt much inclined to take notice of this conduct, because the Editor has requested an answer to the writer, to whom I therefore send the following.

You, in the first place, say that the Saṅkhya is the Saṅkhya of the Vedānta, and for that purpose you state its doctrine, saying "that it teaches God to be one, eternal, unchangeable by past, present or future time, without form or desires, beyond the apprehension of the senses, pure intellect, omnipotent, without defect and perfect in every respect; and that there is no other real existence except him, and that the soul is different from him; that this saṅkhya is created by his power, i.e., Maya, and that Maya is opposed to a true knowledge of God, (i.e., after the acquisition of a knowledge of God the effect of Maya, which is the universe, no longer appears as a real existence, in the same manner as when a piece of rope is mistaken for a snake the misapprehended existence of the snake is lost, just as by a knowledge of the real existence of the rope, or as the palace of Gandharvas seen in a dream ceases to appear immediately after the explanation of the dream."

Now, you allege these faults in these doctrines. 1st. An admission of their truth either brings reproach upon God or establishes the supremacy and eternity both of God and of Maya. As you have not stated what reproach attaches to God from the admission of these doctrines, I am unable to answer the first alternative. If you kindly particularize it, I may endeavour to make a reply. As to the latter alternative respecting the supremacy and eternity of Maya, I beg to answer, that the followers of the Vedanta (in common with Christians and Musalmans who believe God to be eternal) profess also the eternity of all his attributes. Maya is the creating power of the eternal God, and consequently it is declared by the Vedanta to be eternal. "Maya" has no separate existence; it is the power of God and is known by "its effects as heat is the power of fire and has no separate existence, yet is known from its effects" (quoted in the Vedanta.) Should it be improper to declare the attributes of God eternal, then such impropriety applies universally to all religious systems, and the Vedanta cannot be alone accused of this impropriety.

In like manner, in the Vedanta and in other systems, as well as in common experience, the superiority of substance over its qualities is acknowledged. The Vedanta has never stated, in any instance, the supremacy both of God and of Maya, that you should charge the Vedanta with absurdity.

The second fault which you find, is that if the soul be the same as God, nothing can justify the belief that the soul is liable to be rewarded and punished according to its good and evil works; for such a belief would amount to the blasphemy that God also is liable to reward and punishment.

I reply—The world, as the Vedanta says, is the effect of Maya, and is material; but God is mere spirit, whose particular influences being shed upon certain material objects are called souls in the same manner as the reflections of the sun are seen on water placed in various vessels. As these reflections of the sun seem to be moved by the motion of the water of those vessels without effecting any motion in the sun, so souls, being, as it were, the reflections of the Supreme Spirit on matter, seem to be affected by the circumstances that influence matter, without God being affected by such circumstances. As some reflections are bright from the purity of the water on which they are cast, while others seem obscure owing to its foulness, so some souls are more pure from the purity of the matter with which they are connected, while others are dull owing to the dullness of matter.

As the reflections of the sun, though without light proper to themselves, appear splendid from their connection with the illuminating sun, so the soul, though not true intellect, seems intellectual and acts as if it were real spirit from its actual relation to the Universal Intellect: and as from the particular relations of the sun to the water placed in different pots, various reflections appear resembling the same sun in nature and differing from it in qualities; and again as these cease to appear on the removal of the water, so through the peculiar relation of various material objects to one Supreme Spirit, numerous souls appear and seem as performing good and evil works, and also receiving their consequences; and as soon as that relation ceases, they, at that very minute cease to appear distinctly from their original. Hence God is one, and the soul, although it is not in fact of a different origin from God, is yet liable to experience the consequences of good and evil works; but this liability of the soul to reward or punishment cannot render God liable to either.

The third fault alleged by you, is, that from the doctrines alluded to, the perfection of God and his sufficiency cannot be maintained. This is your position, but you have advanced no arguments to prove it. If you afterwards do, I may consider the force of them. If you, however, mean by the position that if souls be considered as parts of God, as declared by the Vedanta, and proceeding from the Supreme Spirit, God must be insufficient and imperfect; I will in this case refer you to the above answer, that is, although the reflections of the sun owe to him their existence and depend upon and return to the same sun, yet this circumstance does not tend to prove the insufficiency or imperfection of the sun.

Moreover, you say the Vedanta teaches that as bubbles arise from and again are absorbed in water; in like manner through the influence of Maya the world repeatedly proceeds from, depends upon, and is absorbed into God; and hence you infer that, according to this doctrine, the reproach of God's being under the influence of Maya attaches to the Deity. I reply, that the resemblance of the bubbles with the world is maintained by the Vedanta only in two respects: 1st, as the bubbles receive from water through the influence of the wind, their birth and existence, so the world takes by the power of God, its original existence from the Supreme Being and depends upon him ; and 2ndly, that there is no reality in the existence either of bubbles or of the world. When we say such a one is like a lion, we mean resemblance only in respect of courage and strength and not in every respect, as in point of shape, size, &c. In like manner the resemblance of the world to bubbles, in this instance, lies in point of dependence and unreality. Were the similarity acknowledged in every respect we must admit God to be an insensitive existence like a portion of water and the world as a bubble to be a small part of God moving sometimes on the surface of the Deity and again uniting with him. Those who look only after faults, may think themselves justified in alleging that in consequence of the comparison of the world to bubbles of water and of Maya to the wind, as found in the Vedanta, God is supposed to be influenced by Maya.

Maya is the power of God through which the world receives its birth, existence and changes ; but no men of learning who are not biassed by partiality, would infer from these opinions an idea of the inferiority of God to Maya, his attribute. For as men of every tribe and of every country whatsoever acknowledge God to be the Cause of the world, they necessarily consider him possessed of the power through which he creates the world. But no one is from this concluded to believe that God is subordinate to that power. God pardons the sins of those that sincerely repent, through his attribute of mercy : this cannot be taken as an admission of the Deity's subjection to his own mercy. The followers of the Vedanta say, that Maya is opposed to knowledge, for when a true knowledge of God is obtained, the effect of Maya, which makes the soul appear distinct from God, does immediately cease.

The term Maya implies, primarily, the power of creation, and secondarily, its effect, which is the Universe. The Vedanta, by comparing the world with the misconceived notion of a snake, when a rope really exists, means that the world, like the supposed snake, has no independent existence, that it receives its existence from the Supreme Being. In like manner the Vedanta compares the world with a dream : as all the objects seen in a dream depend upon the motion of the mind, so the existence of the world is dependent upon the being of God, who is the only object of supreme love ; and in declaring that God is all in all and that there is no other substance except God, the Vedanta means that existence in reality belongs to God alone. He is consequently true and omnipresent; nothing else can bear the name of true existence. We find the phrases, God is all and in all, in the Christian books; and I suppose they do not mean by such words that pots, mats, &c., are gods. I am inclined to believe that by these terms they mean the omnipresence of God. Why do you attempt, by cavils, to find fault with the Vedanta?

All the objects are divided into matter and spirit. The world, as Vedanta says, is but matter, the effect of Maya, and God is spirit. Hence as every material object takes its origin from the universal matter under the superintendence of the Supreme Spirit, and again returns to its origin; so all individual perceiving existences, called souls, like reflections of the sun, appear differently from each other depending upon the universal perception and again returning to it. We see the flame of one candle appearing differently from that of another, but as soon as its connexion with the candle is over, each is absorbed into the universal heat. In like manner, the individual spirits return to the universal Supreme Spirit, as soon as its connexion with matter is destroyed.

Whether is it more reasonable to say that the intellectual soul has its origin from the universal pure Spirit, or that the soul is made of nothing or of insensible matter? If you say God is omnipotent, he can therefore produce the soul from nothing, you would be involved in difficulties; one of which is that as God is not a perceptible object, we can establish his existence only from reason and experience: were we to set aside reason and experience in order to admit that the soul or any other object is made from nothing, there would remain no means to prove the existence of God, much less of his omnipotence. It would strengthen atheistical tenets and destroy all religion, to defy inference from experience.

You find fault with the Nyaya Sastra, that it declares that God is one, and souls are various, but both imperishable; that space, position and time, as well as atoms are eternal; and that the power of creation resides in God in a peculiarly united relation. It says also that God allots to the soul the consequences of its good and evil works; and that he is possessed of immutable will. Hence you maintain that according to these doctrines, God cannot be supposed to be the true cause of the world; because he, like us, creates things with the aid of materials, such as matter, &c. I reply—Every professor of any theistical system, such as the followers of the Nyaya doctrines, and those of Christianity believe that God is not perishable, and that the soul has no end. The soul, during an endless period, either enjoys the beatitude procured by the acquisition of a knowledge of God, or receives the consequences of works. In like manner, they both believe that it is God that bestows on the soul the consequences of its good and evil actions; and that the will of God is immutable. If any fault be found with these doctrines, then the system of the Nyaya and of Christianity both must be equally subject to it; for both systems maintain these doctrines.

Besides, different objects, as the Nyaya says, are of course produced at different times, a circumstance which cannot disprove the eternity of the will of God, who is beyond the limits of time; but all other objects are effected at certain times as appointed by the eternal will of God.

The relation which subsists between a substance and its quality or action, is called "Samavaya" and by that relation the act of creating the world resides in the Creator, a fact which is acknowledged by almost all theists. No being can be called an agent, unless an action be found in him.

No one can ever conceive any object, whether God or not-God, divested of space and time. If you therefore set aside the idea of space and time, you will not be able to prove anything whatever. Both the followers of the Nyaya and of the Christian religion believe God to be eternal, that is, he exists from eternity to eternity; and the very term eternity, implying duration without beginning or end, makes it coeval with God. But if we mean by the eternal existence of God, that he had no beginning in point of time nor will he have an end—this definition is not only applicable to God and to time, but also points out even that the notion of the eternity of God depends on the notion of time.

It is obvious that the material cause of the world is its most minute particles, whose destruction is evidently impossible: these are called anus or atoms. The immaterial God cannot be supposed the material cause of those particles, nor can Nothing be supposed to be the cause of them: therefore these particles must be eternal, and are only brought into different forms, at different times and places, by the will of God. We see all that originate in volition or voluntary causes, producing effects by means of materials; and as God is acknowledged by all parties to be the voluntary cause of the world, he therefore is believed to have created the world by means of matter, space, and time. The objection which you make to this system, is, that according to this doctrine the Creator of the world and the individual soul, which is also a partial creator, should be considered gods; the only difference would be that the former is greater than the latter. I reply—Such objection is not applicable to this system; because God is an independent agent, and the Creator of the whole world; but the soul is an inferior Agent dependent in all its acts on the will of God. No partial resemblance can establish the equality of any being with God; for Christians and Hindoos ascribe to God and to the soul, will and mercy; but neither of them suppose that therefore both are Gods, but that one is superior and the other inferior.

You object to the Mimansa, saying that it declares God to be the wonderful consequences occasioned by the performance of various sacrificial rites consisting of various articles, and of incantations composed of Sanskrit words; but that among mankind there are various languages and sastras, and both language and sacrificial articles are but insensible and under the power of man. How can God be the consequences of rites, the product of language and sacrificial articles, both of which are in the power of human beings? And you again say, that according to the Mimansa doctrines, God is one and that he is mere rites; but rites are various. How can the unity of God, according to these sentiments, be maintained? Especially in those countries where rites are not performed in the Sanskrit language, God cannot exist. I reply, in the first place, the two objections offered by you are inconsistent with each other; for first you say that God is said by the Mimansa to be the consequences of rites, and again you say that he is declared to be rites themselves. However, the followers of the Mimansa are of two classes: one do not carry their view further than the performance of rites, and they are reckoned among atheists; another sect profess the existence of God, but they say that the reward or punishment which we experience is the consequence of our works, to which God is quite neutral; and they maintain that to say that God, by inducing some men to pray to him or to act virtuously, rewards them, and at the same time neglects others and then punishes them for not having made their supplications to him (though both are equally his children), amounts to an imputation against God of unjust partiality. Hence it is evident, that according to the doctrines of this sect, the unity of God is well maintained.

In attempting to expose the Patanjala Darsana you say that it recommends to man, in lieu of rites, to perform yoga (or the regulating of breath in a particular mode which is calculated to divert the human mind from all worldly objects :) therefore the objections applicable to the Mimansa are applicable to the Patanjala also.

I reply—It is declared in the Patanjala that through means of yoga man may surmount all the distress and grievances of the world whereby he may enjoy beatitude, and that God is pure and beyond the apprehension of the senses and is the Superintendent of the universe. I am therefore at a loss to know upon what ground you have placed the Patanjala on a level with the Mimansa.

You find fault with the doctrines of the Sankhya that it represents the Ruler of nature and nature as the two halves of a grain of vetch, but on account of the supremacy of the former, he is called the invisible God. Hence you infer the duality of the Deity. I reply that the invisible but pervading nature is said by the Sankhya to be, under the influence of the Supreme Spirit, the cause of the existence and continuation of the universe. Nature is therefore declared by the Sankhya to be subordinate to, and dependent on the perceiving Spirit, and consequently the Spirit is the Supreme God.

The commentators, in their interpretation of the Veda, though they differ from each other on subordinate subjects, yet all agree in ascribing to him neither form nor flesh, neither birth nor death.

The remaining part of the answer is to be inserted in the 2nd number of the Magazine.

NUMBER SECOND
BRAHMUNICAL MAGAZINE.

Translation of an extract from a letter (shewing the unreasonableness of the Hindoo Sastras,) which appeared in the Samachar Darpan, a weekly newspaper printed at the Mission Press, Shreerampore, of date July 14, 1821.

FIFTHLY. In the Puranas and Tantras the worship of God as possessing various names, forms and localities is ordered for the benefit of mankind and the choosing of a spiritual teacher and submitting implicitly to his instructions, are also strictly enjoined; and they also enjoin the belief that such visible gods—although having, like us, women and children, although subject to the senses and discharging all bodily functions—are omnipresent. This is very wonderful. In the first place, from this it follows that there are many gods, and they are subject to the senses. Secondly, the omnipresence of a being possessed of name and form is incredible. If you say his organs are not like ours, we acknowledge it. But if he is not possessed of organs composed of the material elements like us, then we must consider him as possessed of organs composed of immaterial elements; but material existences can never know immaterial objects, why then should I acknowledge him to be possessed of names and forms? Thirdly, that the Sastra says that God is possessed of name and form, but that mankind cannot see him with their natural eyes. On this ground, how can I acknowledge his forms and names? Fourthly, in that Sastra there is an account of the regard due to the words of a spiritual teacher. If any one is unacquainted with a particular subject how can his instructions on that subject be of any advantage? There would be some more reason, if any one desirous of knowing the way of God from another should first ascertain his qualifications and then put confidence in him. Any mode of receiving religious instruction besides this, although it may be agreeable to the popular practice, will be productive of no advantage.

SIXTHLY. According to the doctrine of the Hindoo Sastras, mankind are repeatedly born and repeatedly die, assuming through the influence of their works animate or inanimate bodies. According to one sect there is the eternal enjoyment of heaven or endurance of hell after death, and according to another sect there is no future state; and all the inhabitants of this world, except the inhabitants of Hindoostan, receive no consequence of their works and are not subject to works. Which of these is true? and in what way is it possible that they can all alike be consistent with the sastras?

A learned person has sent from a distant place a letter containing these few questions. His wish is to obtain an answer to each question and it has accordingly been printed: Whoever writes a proper answer may have it printed and everywhere distributed by sending it to the Shreerampore printing office.

REPLY TO THE FOREGOING.

Translation of an extract from a reply in defence of the Hindoo Sastras which was sent to the Editor of the Samachar Darpan, but was not inserted in that paper.

FIFTHLY. You find fault with the Puranas and Tantras that they have established the duty of worshipping God, for the benefit of mankind, as possessing various forms, names and localities; because they order to have a spiritual teacher, and to repose implicit confidence in his words: because they acknowledge the omnipresence of a Being whom yet they allow to be possessed of form, wife, and children, subject to the senses, and discharging all bodily functions; and because according to this, in the first place, it appears that there are many gods and that they enjoy the things of this world: that secondly, the omnipresence of a being possessed of name and form is incredible: and that thirdly, those Sastras affirm that God is possessed of name and form; but mortals cannot perceive him by their bodily eyes—how on this ground can we acknowledge his name and form?

I answer. The Puranas, &c., agreeable to the Vedanta represent God in every way as incomprehensible and without form. There is, moreover, this in the Puranas, that lest persons of feeble intellect unable to comprehend God as not subject to the senses and without form, should either pass their life without any religious duties whatsoever or should engage in evil work—to prevent this they have represented God in the form of a man and other animals and as possessed of all those desires with which we are conversant whereby they may have some regard to the Divine Being. Afterwards by diligent endeavours they become qualified for the true knowledge of God: but over and over again the Puranas have carefully affirmed, that they have given this account of the forms of God with a view to the benefit of persons of weak minds, and that in truth, God is without name, form, organs, and sensual enjoyment. “Weak and ignorant persons, unable to know the supreme and indivisible God, think of him as possessed of certain limitations.” (Sentence quoted in the commentary upon the Mandukya Upanishad.) “For the assistance of

"the worshippers of the Supreme Being, who is pure intellect, one, without divisibility or body, a fictitious representation is given of his form" (a sentence of Jamadagni quoted by the Smartta). "According to the nature of his qualities, his various forms have been fictitiously given for the benefit of those worshippers who are of slow understanding." (Mahanirvana Tantra.)

But it is particularly to be noticed, that there is no end of the Tantras. In the same manner the Mahapuranas, Puranas, Upapuranas, Ramayana, &c., are very numerous: on this account an excellent rule from the first has been this, that those Puranas and Tantras which have commentaries, and those parts which have been quoted by the acknowledged expounders, are received for evidence; otherwise a sentence quoted on the mere authority of the Puranas and Tantras is not considered evidence. Those numerous Puranas and Tantras which have no commentary and are not quoted by any established expounder may probably be of recent composition. Some Puranas and Tantras are received in one province, the natives of other provinces consider them spurious; or rather, what some people in a province acknowledge, others considering it to be only recent, do not receive; therefore those Puranas and Tantras only which have been commented upon or quoted by respectable authors are to be regarded. A commonly received rule for ascertaining the authority of any book is this, that whatever book opposes the Veda, is destitute of authority. "All Smritis which are contrary to the Veda, and all atheistical works, are not conducive to future happiness: they dwell in darkness." MANU. But the missionary gentlemen seldom translate into English the Upanishads, the ancient Smritis, the Tantras quoted by respectable authors and which have been always regarded. But having translated those works which are opposed to the Vedas, which are not quoted by any respectable author, and which have never been regarded as authority, they always represent the Hindoo Religion as very base.

With a view to prove the errors of the Puranas and Tantras, you say, that the Puranas represent God as possessed of various names and forms, as possessed of a wife and children, and as subject to the senses, and to the discharge of bodily functions; from which it follows that there are many gods, that they are subject to sensual pleasure, and the omnipresence of God cannot be maintained. I therefore humbly ask the missionary gentlemen, whether or not they call Jesus Christ, who is possessed of the human form and also the Holy Ghost who is possessed of the dove shape, the very Christ? (1) And for a thing they do not consider that Jesus Christ, the very Christ, received impressions by the external organs, eyes, &c., and operated by means of the active organs, hands, &c. And whether or not Jesus considered him as subject to all the human passions? Was he angry or not? (2) Was his mind afflicted or not? (3) Did he experience any suffering or pain? (4) And did he not eat and drink? (5) Did he not live a long time with his own mother, brother and relations? (6) Was he not born? (7) And did he not die? (8) Did he not die a truly full life, who is the very God, in the form of a human being, and in the form of another? (9) And did he not forget Jesus Christ by his intercourse with a woman? (10) If they acknowledge all this, then they cannot find fault with the Puranas, alleging that in them the names and the forms of God are established, and that a being to them tied must be considered as subject to the senses, and as possessing senses and organs, and that God must be considered as having a wife and child, and as not possessed of omnipotence on account of his having a form. Because all these errors, viz. the plurality of gods, their sensual indulgence, and their locality are applicable to themselves in a complete degree. To say that something however contrary to the laws of nature, is possible with God, will equally afford a pretence to missionaries and Hindu sects support of their respective incarnations. The aged Vyasa has spoken truth in the Mahabharata: "O King!

"And the Holy Ghost descended in a dove shape into a dove upon him?" Luke, Chap. III. v. 22.

"And when he had read, he closed the book, and began to say: 'Mark, Chap. III, v. 10.

"But being in an agony he prayed more earnestly; and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down upon the ground." Luke, Chap. XXII. v. 44.

"I have cried with a loud voice, saying, 'Who will give me a sign?' Matthew, Chap. XXIII. v. 16.

"I have been of you as a servant, and as a friend." Luke, Chap. VII. v. 34.

"And he went down into Nazareth, and was subject unto them." Luke, Chap. IV. v. 16.

"When Jesus was born, a star shined." Matthew, Chap. II. v. 1.

"I have been of you as a servant, and as a friend." Luke, Chap. XXIII. v. 33.

"I have been of you as a servant, and as a friend." Luke, Chap. XXIII. v. 33.

"The Holy Ghost shall be upon thee." Luke, Chap. I. v. 35. "On the birth of Jesus Christ was on him went. When he was born, Mary was in, and Joseph, before they came together, she was joined with Christ of the Holy Ghost." Matthew, Chap. I. v. 18.

"the worshippers of the Supreme Being, who is pure intellect, one; without divisibility or body, a fictitious representation is given of his form" (a sentence of Jamadagni quoted by the Smarṭta). "According to the nature of his qualities, his various forms have been fictitiously given for the benefit of those worshippers who are of slow understanding." (Mahanirvana Tantra.)

But it is particularly to be noticed, that there is no end of the Tantras. In the same manner the Mahapuranas, Puranas, Upapuranas, Ramayana, &c., are very numerous: on this account an excellent rule from the first has been this, that those Puranas and Tantras which have commentaries, and those parts which have been quoted by the acknowledged expounders, are received for evidence; otherwise a sentence quoted on the mere authority of the Puranas and Tantras is not considered evidence. (10) If they acknowledge all this, then they cannot find fault with the Puranan, alleging that in them the nature and the forms of God are established and that according to them God must be considered as subject to the senses, and as possessing organs and organs, and that God must be considered as having a wife and child, and as not possessed of omniscience on account of his having a form. Because all these errors, viz., the plurality of gods, their sensual indulgence, and their locality are applicable to themselves in a complete degree. To say that everything however contrary to the laws of nature, is possible with God, will equally afford a pretence to immutation and Hindism in regard to their respective incarnations. The sacred Vyasa has spoken truth in the Mahabharata: "O King! (1) And the Holy Ghost descended in the dove shape & it abode upon him," Luke, Chap. III. v. 22.

(2) "And when he had he received about six years, with anger," Mark, Chap. III. v. 5.

(3) "And being in an agony he prayed more earnestly, and his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down the ground," Luke, Chap. XXII. v. 44.

(4) "Jesus sat with a lance, saying, 'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?'" Matthew, Chap. XXVII. v. 46.

(5) "And he was hungry and thirsty," Luke, Chap. XXII. v. 34.

(6) "And he was with his mother, and came to Jerusalem and was subject unto them," Luke, Chap. II. v. 41.

(7) "When Jesus was born," Matthew, Chap. I. v. 1.

(8) "And after that he arose from the dead," Luke, Chap. XXIV. v. 33.

(9) "And the Holy Ghost came upon him," Luke, Chap. I. v. 35.

(10) "The Holy Ghost came upon him," Luke, Chap. I. v. 35.

The birth of Jesus Christ was on this manner: When he the mother Mary was engaged to Joseph, before they came together, she was found with fruit of the Holy Ghost. Matthew, Chap. I. v. 18.

a person sees the faults of another although they are like the grains of mustard seed, but although his own faults are big as the Bel fruit, looking at them he cannot perceive them." Moreover the Puranas say that the names, forms and sensual indulgence of God which we have mentioned, are fictitious; and we have so spoken with a view to engage the minds of persons of weak understanding; but the missionary gentlemen say that the account which is given in the Bible of the names, forms and sensual indulgence of God is real. Therefore the plurality of gods, their locality and subjection to sensual indulgence, are faults to be found in a real sense, only in the system of the missionary gentlemen.

Secondly, the Hindoo Puranas and Tantras, in which the fictitious account is given, are subordinate to the Veda, but are not the very Veda itself: when they disagree with the Veda their authority is not regarded. "When the Veda and the Puranas disagree, the Veda must be regarded; pious men will always explain the Puranas &c., in agreement with what the Veda declares." (Quotation by the Smartta). But the missionary gentlemen consider the Bible as their Veda and in explaining it, have, in this manner, dishonoured God in a real sense. A real error, therefore, and an excess of error is discovered in their own system.

You have moreover asked, what advantage can be derived from the instructions of a spiritual teacher, who is himself ignorant of what he professes to teach? What advantage is there in adopting a spiritual teacher according to the popular practice in this country? I reply, this objection is not at all applicable to the Hindoo Sastra, because the Sastra enjoins that such a spiritual teacher must be chosen as is acquainted with what he teaches, but in choosing any other sort of spiritual teacher no spiritual benefit is obtained for the purpose of divine knowledge. "He, taking in his hand the sacrificial wood, must approach to a spiritual teacher who is well read in the Vedas and devoted to the faith of Brahma." (Mundaka Veda). "There are many spiritual teachers who take the wealth of their disciples; but a spiritual teacher who removes the errors of his disciples, O! goddess, is difficult to be obtained" (Tantra). The definition of a spiritual teacher: "He is subdued in the members of his body and affections of his mind, of honourable birth," &c. (Quotation by Krishnananda).

You say at the end, that according to one Hindoo Sastra, by means of works the body repeatedly becomes animate or inanimate; that, according to another sect, after leaving the body the soul enters the eternal enjoyment of heaven or the eternal endurance of hell. But according to another sect there is no future state. I have not been mentioned in any part of the Hindu Sastras that there is no future state. This is an atheistical sect. But it is true that the Hindus believe that even in this world, the consequences of their good and evil works are experienced, and that after death, even to the lowest of the low and holiness of some in heaven, even to the Hindu belief, the consequences of the good and evil works of the soul are giving them other bodies either superior or inferior. But what mutual disagreement appears in the Hindu Sastras after this? According to the Christian doctrine, however, there are no consequences of consequences attached to different degrees of evil or good. It gives the punishment of one great reward for all, even as in the case of the Jews. It is written in the Bible, that even in this world God punished their sins and yet said that he would not visit the iniquity of the fathers upon himself, but that he giving unto every man according to his works, "only in this world." And it is also written in the Bible, that he who has engaged good and suffered evil, after death he will receive no inconsistency appears in the Bible, but in the Christian doctrine, and he gives to me the same punishment of their deeds as to me, and others in the world. Christians all agree, that after the resurrection of the body, God, at the time of judgment, gives a reward to the spirit, and bestows on this corporeal spirit the consequences of its good and evil works. If they believe that contrary to the laws of Nature, God can give a reward to the spirit and not to the body, the consequences of its works, then who should the reward be given to, in consistency with these laws, God shall give a reward to the body, bestow on the spirit in this world the consequences of its works. You have said that all the inhabitants of the world except those of Hindostan receive no consequences of their works. Such a statement is not contained in any part of their Sastras. But you also say that all the other inhabitants of the world have no works; the meaning of which is that they have no other reward than the Veda, which is indeed a great treasure. Therefore the justice is in every respect perfectly consistent. You will observe the same form of the Dharma, which all the Dharma call to be the same, and all above all, in considering the nature of other objects, that all variously understood the meaning of the Veda expressed themselves differently. In the same manner although the commentators on the Bible in some parts disagree, this is no fault of the Bible and no diminution of the reputation of the commentators.

I have now written what I intended, respecting the errors which, as contrary to reason, you have stated to be in the Hindoo Sastra. The reverend missionaries are in Calcutta, Shreerampore and various other places. What is afterwards written, is intended to ascertain how far their doctrines are agreeable to reason.

They call Jesus Christ the Son of God and the very God :—How can the son be the very Father ?

They sometimes call Jesus Christ the Son of man, and yet say no man was his Father.

They say that God is one, and yet say that the Father is God, the Son is God and the Holy Ghost is God.

They say that God must be worshipped in spirit and yet they worship Jesus Christ as very God, although he is possessed of a material body.

They say that the Son is of the same essence and existence as the Father, and they also say that the Son is equal to the Father. But how can equality subsist except between objects possessed of different essences and existences ?

I shall be much obliged by answers to these enquiries.

NUMBER THIRD

OF THE

BRAHMUNICAL MAGAZINE.

In the Friend of India No. 38 a reply has been made in English to the 2nd number of the Brahmuncal Magazine, composed both in English and Bengali and published a few weeks ago. As the controversy in question is intended by both parties chiefly for the benefit of the Hindoo community and secondarily for the use of Europeans, I feel much disappointed in my expectation of being favoured by the editor or his colleagues with a reply in English and Bengali to insert in the next number of my Magazine. I however must receive it as it is, and beg to be allowed to make a few remarks on the reply.

As to my first question proposed in the Magazine in the following words, "They call Jesus Christ the son of God and the very God—how can the son be the very father?" the Editor denies the accuracy of the information on which I found this question, and firmly asserts that "the Bible nowhere says that the son is the father." I, therefore, deem it necessary to shew my reason for the above query, leaving it to the public to pronounce on the justifiableness of it, either in their conversation or religious publications. Christian teachers profess that God is one, and that Jesus Christ is the son of God. Hence I naturally concluded that they believe the son to be the father, and consequently questioned the reasonableness of such a doctrine. For when a person affirms that such a one, say James, is one, and that John is his son, and again says that John is actually James, we should naturally conclude that he means that John the son is James the father, and be at liberty to ask how can John the son be James the father? But as the Editor, a leading minister of that religion, declares that "the Bible nowhere says that the son is the father, but says that the son is equal to the father, in nature and essence" and "distinct in person" &c., and recommends me to reflect on mankind, of whom "every son, who has not the same human nature with his father, must be a monster": it would be too much boldness on my part to give preference to my apprehension of the meaning of the Bible over that of the Editor. I would therefore have admitted (as suggested by the Editor) that the son of God is God, on the analogy and in the sense that the son of a man is a man, had I not been compelled by his very suggestion to reject entirely his other still more important assertion, that is, the coeval existence of the son with the father. For, the belief of the nature of the son of man being the same as that of the father, though it justifies the idea of the son of God being God, is utterly repugnant to the possibility of the son being coeval with his father. It is evident that if a son of man be supposed coeval with his father, he must be considered something more extraordinary than a monster!

It is believed by all religious sects, that when God reveals his will or law to the human race, he reveals it through their language in its common acceptation. I beg, therefore, of the Editor, to favour me with a direct reply to the following question.—Do the missionary gentlemen take the word "God" as a proper name or as a common one, all nouns being divided into two kinds, common and proper? In the former case, that is, if they consider the term "God" appropriated to one individual existence as every other proper name is, they must relinquish the idea of the son of God being the very God. How can we think the son of John or James to be John or James, or coeval with John or James? And in the latter case, that is, if they receive the term "God" as common name, they may maintain the opinion that the son of God is God in the same way as the son of a man is man, which, as the Editor says, "must necessarily be the case," but they, in this case, cannot be justified in professing a belief in the equal duration of the son with the father; for every son, whatever may be his nature, must have existence originating subsequently to that of his own father. The only difference between these two common nouns "God" and "man" would be, that the latter includes a great many individuals under it and the former only three distinct persons, though of superior power and nature. But no smallness of the number or mightiness of power of persons under one common name, can exclude it from being classed as a general noun; for it is well established by the observers of nature that the number of individuals comprised under the term "mankind" is much less, and their nature is far more mighty, than the living embryos in the milk of a single cod-fish—a circumstance which does not make man less a genus than the term fish.

We see individuals under one term of mankind, though they are distinct in person, yet one in nature, as being all men. In like manner three persons under one godhead, according to the Editor, though they are distinct in person are yet, I infer, considered by him one in nature as gods,—god the Father, god the son, and god the Holy Ghost. Is this the unity of God which the Editor professes? Can this doctrine justify him in ridiculing Hindoo polytheism, because many of them say, that under one Godhead there are more than three beings distinct in person but one in nature?

As to my third question "They say God is one, and yet say that "the Father is God, the Son is God and the Holy Ghost is God", the Editor admits the fact, as he says, that "the Bible ascribes the same divine nature and perfections to the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, and yet declares that though distinct in person they are one in nature and attributes," that "it (the Bible) teaches men to worship each of them as God," and that "the Father, Son and Holy Ghost are "described in Scripture as equally giving grace and peace to men, as "pardoning sin and leading men into the path of righteousness." But instead of shewing the reasonableness of the idea of three distinct gods being one God, as repeated, he confesses the total inconsistency of this doctrine with reason and makes the Bible responsible for it, saying, "But the Bible, while it fully reveals these facts, still forbears "to inform us how the Father, the Son, and the Holy spirit exist and "form the triune God"; and adds, "nor had it informed us, are we certain that we should have comprehended it." The Editor or his colleagues ought to have taken into consideration such unreasonableness attaching to the most important of all their doctrines before they had published in the "Samachar-Darpan" the letter accusing the Vedanta and the rest of the Hindoo Sastras of want of reason—a circumstance which might have saved the Editor the reluctant avowal of the unreasonableness of the foundation of his own system of faith. The Editor, however, attempts to procure belief for this doctrine so palpably contrary to reason and experience, under the plea that "there are many things which pass around and within us, of the "manner of which we can form no just idea, though no one doubts "their truth. We know not how plants and trees draw matter from "the earth and transform it into the leaves, flowers, and fruits, "although no one questions the fact; nor how mind so acts upon "matter as to enable a man at will to raise his hand to his head, and "with it to perform the hardest labour. Until we comprehend the manner in which these operations on matter are effected, which constantly pass around and within us, we have little reason to complain, because the triune God has not condescended to inform us of the precise mode in which his infinite and glorious nature exists and acts." How is it possible for the Editor, or for any one possessed of common sense, not to perceive the gross error of drawing an analogy from things around and within us to the three distinct persons of the Godhead in one existence, which so far from being around or within us, exist only in the imagination of the missionaries?

Here the growth of a tree and its producing leaves and flowers, as well as the operation of mind on matter, being around and within us, are commonly perceptible by all men whether Christians or not. Christians, a denial of which is utterly impossible for one who is possessed of the senses. It is very true that the exact manner in which plants grow or the mind operates, and the precise principles of nature which act upon them, are not thoroughly understood. But all that these facts amount to is, that things around or within us, whether visible or demonstrated by visible facts, compel conviction. Do the three distinct persons of Godhead in unity exist like growing trees or bodies joined to mind? Are they phenomena commonly perceptible alike by Christians and non-Christians? Or are they like mountains of ice in northern countries, which, though they are not seen or felt by us, yet are reported to us by eye-witnesses, without any contradiction from others who have also passed the places where they are said to exist, and where they are liable to be seen by any one, that we should be compelled to believe the existence of the triune God like that of growing trees, operating minds, or mountains of ice, though we cannot understand them; or rather though we find them exactly contrary to what we have understood? Christians may perhaps consider the Trinity as perceptible by them through the force of early instructions, in the same manner as the followers of the Tantra doctrines among Hindoos in Bengal consider God as consisting of five distinct persons and yet as one God, and as the generality of modern Hindoos esteem numerous incarnations under one Godhead almost as an experienced fact from their early habits. How can Christians, who in general justly pride themselves on their cultivated understanding, admit such an analogy or justify any one in misleading others with such sophistries? The only excuse which I feel inclined to make for them, and perhaps a true one, is, that the enlightened amongst them, like several of the Greek and Roman philosophers, yield, through policy, to the vulgar opinions, though fully sensible of the unjustifiableness of them. I am, however, sorry to observe that the minds of a great number of Christians are so biased in favour of the doctrine of the Trinity from the strong impression made on them by education in their youth, that they can readily defy the suggestions of the senses, reason, and experience in opposition to this doctrine. They accuse Brahmanical priests of having an unjust ascendancy over their pupils, while they forget how greatly Christians are influenced by their ministers so as to overlook the error of such an analogy as the above, and others of a similar nature.

The Editor has first declared that "the Bible forbears to inform us how the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit exist," &c., "the triune God has not condescended to inform us of the precise mode in which his infinite and glorious nature exists and acts"; nevertheless he particularizes the mode of their existence and actions separately and distinctly from the authority of the Bible, stating that "the Son who has existed with the Father from eternity has created heaven and earth" that "from his infinite pity to sinful men he condescended to lay aside his glory for a season;" that "taking on himself the form of a servant he might worship and obey the father as his God"; that "he prayed his father to glorify him only with his own glory which he had with his father before the foundation of the world and which for a season he had laid aside;" that "he was permitted to ascend up where he was before;" and that lastly "he was seated at the right-hand of the Majesty on high" who "gave him as mediator all power in heaven and earth;" and that "God the Spirit was also pleased to testify to men his approbation of the Son's becoming incarnate, by visibly descending upon him in the form of a dove." Notwithstanding their different locations, different actions and distinct existences, the Editor represents them as one, and also demands of the rest of the world a belief in their unity. Is it possible even to conceive for a moment the identity between three Beings, one of them in heaven expressing his pleasure at the conduct of the second, who at the same time on the earth was performing religious rites, and the third of them then residing between heaven and earth descending on the second at the will of the first. If the difference of habits and situations as well as of

"ness, which things omniscience, omnipotence, infinite love and mercy "can alone perform." I do not know any polytheistical system more clear than this description of the Editor as declaring three Beings equally omniscient, omnipotent, and possessed of infinite mercy. I, however, beg to ask, whether the omnipotence, omniscience, and infinite mercy of one person is sufficient or not to arrange the universal system and preserve its harmony? If so, an admission of the omnipotence and omniscience of the second and the third is superfluous and absurd; but if not sufficient, why should we stop at the number three and not carry on the numeration until the number of omnipotent Beings becomes at least equal to that of the heavenly bodies, ascribing to each the management of every globe. From the skill which Europeans generally display in conducting political affairs and effecting mechanical inventions, foreigners very often conclude that their religious doctrines would be equally reasonable; but as soon as any one of them is made acquainted with such doctrines as are professed by the Editor and by a great number of his countrymen, he will firmly believe that religious truth has no connection with political success.

My fifth question was, "How can equality subsist except between objects possessed of different essences and existences?" But the Editor repeats only a part of it, i.e. how the son can be equal with the father, when he does possess the same nature, and then declares the question unintelligible. I never meant the impossibility of equality between persons or things that possess the same nature, as we find often equality in some property subsisting between man and man though possessing the same nature; but as no equality can subsist except between things of different existences, and the professed belief of the missionary gentleman was that the Son is the same in existence as well as in nature with the father, I took the liberty to ask how the son can be equal with the father, when he is supposed to be possessed of the same nature and existence? Unless they deny to the Son the same existence with the Father, they cannot, I think, maintain his equality with the Father. I, therefore, presume, my question is perfectly intelligible.

As to my second remark, viz., "They sometimes call Jesus Christ the son of man, and yet say no man was his Father," the Editor makes the following reply,—“While, thus incarnate, he in many ways unavoidably displayed his divine nature; but being born of a woman and in all things like unto us as to his human nature, yet without sin, he condescended to call himself the Son of man, although no man was his Father." I wonder that the Editor, who ~~was~~ the ~~un~~learned attempter so warmly to prove the deity and inspiration of Jesus Christ, on the other hand accuses the same being of having declared, what was totally contrary to the fact, saying, that he condescended to call him of the Son of man, although no man ~~was~~ his father. I also feel surprised at the inconsistency of the Editor, who, while justifying the above statement respecting his Lord, charges the Hindu Pantheists with falsity, because the Pantheists, in instructing men of weak understanding, have made allegorical representations of God, though they repeatedly confess the allegorical nature of their instructions and explain their motives for introducing them. Besides, he imputes false representation to some of the commentators of the Veda, and that only in his instructions the ignorant in a paradoxical manner, and from this single circumstance he condemns "the whole of the Hindu System."

In the very reply of the Editor, I find the phrase "at the right hand of God" quoted by the Editor as a scriptural expression. I therefore beg to know whether the phrase "the right hand of God" implies a true representation of God, or not? I find the following expressions even within the three first chapters of the Bible: "he" "God rested on the seventh day from all his work;" "The Lord God" "walking in the garden in the cool of the day;" "And (God) said" "unto him (Adam) where art thou?" Did Moses mean by the latter "rested" that God ceased to act from fatigue, and attempt to prove the mutableness of God? Did he mean by the phrase "God" "walked in the cool of the day" that he moved by means of legs, like man in general, in the cool of the day to avoid the heat of the weather? Or did he mean by the question "Where art thou?" to imply the pre-existence ignorance of the omniscient God? If so, Moses had strange ideas of Jehovah, and but little better than those maintained by his contemporary heathens. I am, however, inclined to think that Moses made use of these expressions conformable to the understanding of the ignorant Jews of his days without subjecting himself to the charge of falsehood; and this, I am informed by Christians, was the opinion of ancient teachers called Fathers of the Church, as well as of many modern learned Christians.

The Editor expresses his joy at "perceiving that the natives have begun to arouse themselves from that state of morbid apathy and

"insensibility which is a certain symptom of moral death and of "universal corruption of manners," &c. I cannot help feeling compassion for his total want of knowledge of the literary employment and domestic conduct of the native community at large, notwithstanding his long residence in India. During only a few years past, hundreds of works on different subjects, such as Theology, Law, Logic, Grammar, and Astronomy, have been written by the natives of Bengal alone. I do not wonder that they have not reached the knowledge of the Editor, who, in common with all his colleagues, has shut his eyes against anything that might do the smallest credit to the natives. As to the "moral death" ascribed to them by the Editor, I might easily draw a comparison between the domestic conduct of the natives and that of the inhabitants of Europe, to shew where the grossest deficiency lies; but as such a dispute is entirely foreign to the present controversy, I restrain myself from so disagreeable a subject, under the apprehension that it might excite general displeasure.

As to the abusive terms made use of by the Editor, such as "Father of lies alone to whom it (Hindooism) evidently owes its origin," "Impure fables of his false gods," "Pretended gods of Hindoos," &c., common decency prevents me from making use of similar terms in return. We must recollect that we have engaged in solemn religious controversy and not in retorting abuse against each other.

I conclude this reply with expressing my hope that the Editor, on noticing it, will arrange his observations methodically, giving an answer to each of my five questions in succession, that the public may judge with facility of the arguments employed on both sides.

PREFACE.

Notwithstanding my humble suggestions in the third number of this Magazine, against the use of offensive expressions in religious controversy, I find, to my great surprize and concern, in a small tract lately issued from one of the missionary presses and distributed by missionary gentlemen, direct charges of atheism made against the doctrines of the Vedas, and undeserved reflections on us as their followers. This has induced me to publish, after an interval of two years, a fourth number of the Brahmunical Magazine.

In accordance with the mild and liberal spirit of universal toleration, which is well-known to be a fundamental principle of Hindooism, I am far from wishing to oppose any system of religion, much less Christianity; and my regard for the feelings of its professors would restrain me from thus exposing its errors, were they not forced upon my notice by the indiscreet assaults still made by Christian writers on the Hindoo religion. But when they scruple not to wound the feelings of a Hindoo, by attacking the most ancient and sacred oracles of his faith, the inspired Vedas, which have been revered from generation to generation, for time immemorial, should he submit to such wanton aggression without endeavouring to convince these gentlemen, that, in the language of their own Scripture, they "strain at a gnat and swallow a camel" (Matt. XXIII., 24)? Hence they may at least learn from experience a lesson of Charity, which they are ready enough to inculcate upon others, overlooking, at the same time, the precept given by their God: "Do unto others as you would wish to be done by," implying, that if you wish others to treat your religion respectfully, you should not throw offensive reflections upon the religion of others.

I shall still be extremely glad to enter upon a minute investigation of the comparative merits of our respective religions, more especially if the Christian writers carry on the controversy in moderate and decorous language, worthy of literary characters and sincere inquirers after truth.

CHAPTER I.

A reply to certain queries directed against the Vedānta.

A few queries written in the Bengali language, having again issued from the Mission Press, Serampore, directed against the Vedānta system of religion, and a missionary gentleman having brought these queries to the notice of our friend, Ramnath Roy, I naturally expected that the latter would publish a reply.

Disappointed in my expectation, and much hurt at the stigma thrown upon the religion which I profess, following the divine guidance of the Vedas and the dictates of pure reason, I deem it incumbent upon me to defend what I believe to be true, against so unprovoked an aggression.

In his prefatory lines, the author says, that from reading the translation of the Vedānta by Ramnath Roy, he understands that the Vedas declare a knowledge of God to be unattainable by man, and therefore he begs that Ramnath Roy will cease to impart their doctrines until he shall acquire a knowledge of the Deity from some other religious source.

This author, in common with a great number of his fellow-believers, not feeling contented with the perversion and misrepresentation of the purport of his own Bible, has been zealously endeavouring to misquote the writings, revered by others as sacred authority, for the purpose of exposing them to ridicule. To prove this assertion I quote here the very first passage of the translation of the abridgement of the Vedānta by Ramnath Roy, to which the querist refers in his prefatory lines:—viz.

"The illustrious Vyasa, in his celebrated work, the Vedānta, "intimates in the first text, that it is absolutely necessary for man "and to acquire knowledge respecting the Supreme Being; but he "found from the following passages of the Vedas that this inquiry is "limited to very narrow bounds. Vyasa also, from the result of "various arguments coinciding with the Veda, found that an accurate "and positive knowledge of the Supreme Being, is not within the "boundary of comprehension, i.e., what and how the Supreme Being "is, cannot be definitely ascertained. He has, therefore, in the second

"text, explained the Supreme Being by his effects and works, without attempting to define his essence."

Now my readers will plainly perceive in the above quotation, that a perfect knowledge respecting the nature and essence of the Deity is, declared in the Vedanta "to be unattainable;" while a knowledge of his existence through "his effects and works" is duly revealed by the Veda and consequently is zealously studied and imparted by us. We find in the Christian Scriptures declarations to the same purport. Psalm CXLV. "Great is the Lord and greatly to be praised; and his greatness is unsearchable." Job XXXVI. 26. God is great and we know him not: neither can the number of his years be searched out." Will the author of these queries justify any one in following his example, by suggesting to the missionary gentlemen not to inculcate Christian doctrines; on the ground that the Scriptures declare a knowledge of God and the number of the years of his existence unsearchable? I think he will not listen to such a suggestion, and will perhaps say in defence of the missionaries, that since the real nature of God is said in Scripture to be unsearchable, they have never attempted to preach the divine nature and essence. If such be their defence, how could prejudice completely shut the eyes of this interrogator against the plain declaration found in the translation of the Vedanta both in Bengalee and English, which he says he has read: viz., "He (Vyasa) has, therefore, in the second text, explained the Supreme Being by his effects and works without attempting to define his essence."

In answer to his first query, i.e., "Did one God create the world or not?" I refer him to the next passage and to a subsequent passage of the same translation of the Vedanta, viz., "He, by whom the birth, existence, and annihilation of the world is regulated, is the Supreme Being." "All the Vedas prove nothing but the unity of the Supreme Being." "God is indeed one and has no second." These passages will, I hope, be sufficient to convince the querist, that the doctrine of the unity of God is an essential principle of the Vedanta system, however unwelcome it may be to him, as opposing his favorite notion of three Gods, or three Persons equally powerful under an abstract idea of Godhead.

In reply to his second query (i.e., "Does God preserve this world or not? and is his word our rule or not?") consisting of two questions, I have merely to quote the following passages of the same translation of the Vedānta, which as they apply to each severally, I place under two separate heads. 1st. "He from whom the universal world proceeds, who is the support of the world, and he, who sustains the universe, is the Supreme Being." "Who is the almighty and the sole regulator of the universe." 2nd. "God is declared to be the cause of all the Vedas." "Rules and rites are prescribed for the Veda." The former quotations prove that God is the support of the world, and the latter declare that the Veda is the law of God revealed and introduced for our rule and guidance.

As queries 3rd, 4th, and 5th, are in fact one query, I repeat them as they stand and make one reply. "Is God without worldly attributes? If God is destitute of all attributes, then how can a rule of right and wrong be recognized? If you say that God is destitute of all attributes, then what is the difference between your religion and that of an atheist?" I reply: "The Vedānta, does not ascribe to God any power or attribute according to the human notion of properties, as if they being attached or subordinate to their substance, such as the faculty of vision, or of wisdom, compassion, anger, &c., in rational animals. Because these properties are sometimes found arising from the human power in full operation, and again ceasing to operate, as if they were quite extinct; because the power of one of these attributes is often impeded by the operation of another; and because the subject in which they exist, depends upon special members of the body, such as the eye, brain, heart, &c., for the exercise of vision, wisdom, compassion, &c."

In consideration of the incompatibility of such defects with the perfection of the divine nature, the Vedānta declares the very identity of God to be the substitute of the perfection of all the attributes necessary for the creation and support of the universe, and for introducing revelation among men, without representing these attributes as separate properties, depended upon by the Deity for creating and ruling the world. Hence the Vedānta confuses the imagination of any perfect knowledge of the Divine nature, although it is not itself to the understanding of beginners in the study of Vedānta, often ascribes to God such attributes as are held excellent among the human species; as truth, mercy, justice, &c. See again the same translation. "The Veda having at first explained the Deity, denoting by different epithets, begins with the word Ata or name, and declares that all descriptions which have been used to describe the Deity, are

Now, unbiassed readers will judge, which of these two opinions is the more consistent with reason and divine revelation, to wit, the denying of properties to God according to the human notion of qualities in objects, as done by the Vedanta; or the equalising of the number of Gods, or persons under a Godhead, with the number of the supposed principal qualities belonging to the Deity (namely Creation, Redemption, and Sanctification) as practised by the querist and his fellow-believers, who have provided themselves with a God the Father, for the work of creation, a God the Son, for redemption and a God the Holy Ghost, for sanctification.

I do not wonder, that our religious principles are compared with those of atheists, by one, whose ideas of the divine nature are so gross, that he can consider God, as having been born* and circumcised†, as having grown‡ and been subject to parental authority,§ as eating and drinking,|| and even as dying¶ and as having been totally annihilated (though for three days only, the period intervening from the crucifixion of Christ to his resurrection); nor can it give me any concern, if a person, labouring under such extravagant fancies, should, at the same time, insinuate atheism against us, since he must thereby only expose himself to the derision of the discerning public.

As to his sixth and seventh queries, viz. "Do not wicked actions proceed in this world from the depravity of mankind?" 7th. "By what penance can that guilt be expiated, which men contract by the practice of wickedness?" I beg to observe, that a desire of indulging the appetites and of gratifying the passions is, by nature, common to man with the other animals. But the Vedas, coinciding with the natural desire of social intercourse implanted in the human constitution, as the original cause of sympathy with others, require of men to moderate those appetites and regulate those passions, in a manner calculated to preserve the peace and comfort of society, and secure their future happiness; so that mankind may maintain their superiority over the rest of the animal creation, and benefit by one another. For each person to indulge without restraint all the appetites and passions, would be destructive of the harmony of society, which mankind is naturally desirous to preserve. These sentiments are contained in the following passages of the same translation of the Vedanta, viz., "A command over our passions and over the external senses of the body, and good acts, are declared by the Veda to be indispensable in the mind's approximation to God. They should, therefore, be strictly taken care of, and attended to both previously and subsequently to such approximation to the Supreme Being."

In the constant internal struggles between this desire of indulgence, always working powerfully upon the mind, and the social inclination, displayed in various modes, according to the difference of circumstances, of habits, and of education, some yield often to the passions. In that case the only means of attaining an ultimate victory over them is sincere repentance and solemn meditation, which occasion mental disquiet and anxiety forming the punishment of sin; and which are calculated to prevent future surrenders to the passions on similar occasions. The sin which mankind contracts against God, by the practice of wickedness, is believed by us to be expiated by these penances, and not, as supposed by the querist, by the blood of a son of man or son of God, who never participated in our transgressions.

His last query is, "Will mankind at last be certainly raised and judged? and will they suffer or enjoy according to their works or not? In reply to which I beg to observe, that the Vedanta does not confine the reward or punishment of good or evil works to the state after death, much less to a particular day of judgment; but it reveals positively, that a man suffers or enjoys, according to his evil or good deeds, frequently even in this world,—a doctrine which is not, I think, at variance with the first part of the Christian Bible. See the above translation. "From devotion to God all the desired consequences proceed" (meaning of course in this world also). "He, who has no faith in the Supreme Being, is rendered subject to these gods" (properly speaking grand objects).

In conclusion, he makes some other insinuations against the Vedanta; one of which is, that it declares the mind to be God; and consequently that those who adhere to this religion, must follow their natural propensities, and the suggestions of their own minds merely, not the revealed authority of God. I therefore quote these lines found in that very translation, from which the querist draws this conclusion, and leave the public to judge, whether he is not entirely deprived, even of common sense, by rooted religious prejudice, in examining the writings of others, that are not persuaded to think exactly like him and his fellow-believers, viz., "The Vedas not only call the celestial representations deities; but also, in many instances, give this divine epithet to the mind, diet, void space, quadrupeds, animals and slaves:—But neither any of the celestial gods nor any existing creature can be considered the Lord of the universe, because the third Chapter of the Vedanta explains, that by these appellations of the Veda, which denote the diffusive spirit of the Supreme Being equally over all creatures, by means of extension, his omnipresence is established." "Because the Veda declares the performance of these rules to be the cause of the mind's purification and its faith in God,"

If notwithstanding these explanations offered by the Vedanta, the querist persists in his attempt to stigmatise the Veda, and thus argue, that any being declared by the Veda to be God, though figuratively, should be considered as God in reality, by the followers of that system, I would refer him to his own Bible, which in the same figurative sense applies the term "God" to the prophets and the chiefs of Israel, and identifies God with abstract properties, such as love, &c.; and I then ask the querist, whether he admits them to be real Gods and offers his worship to them? and whether he be a follower of the dictates of the powerful passion of love in its most unlimited sense?

His second insinuation is this, that the Vedanta does not forbid the worship of gods and goddesses; and how then can the unity of God be inferred from that work? I reply: The Supreme Being is represented throughout the whole Vedanta System as the only object of true adoration, of which the querist will be convinced, if he refers to the following passages of the same translation, viz., "The worship authorised by all the Vedas is of one nature: as the direction for the worship of the only Supreme Being is invariably found in every part of the Veda. The following passages of the Veda affirm that God is the sole object of worship, viz., 'Adore God alone' 'Know God alone.'" With regard to the suggestions about the worship of other objects besides the Deity, the following explanation is given in the Vedanta. "These, as well as several other texts of the same nature, are not real commands, but only direct those, (for instance idiots) who are unfortunately incapable of adoring the invisible

In replying, as above, to all the "Christian's" queries and insinuations, I have confined my quotations to the translations of the abridgment of the Vedanta—an essay of 21 pages—to which the querist referred in his prefatory lines; so that my readers may perceive that had the querist read only that small work, divesting himself of religious prejudice, he would not have needed to put those questions.

CHAPTER II.

Reasons of a Hindoo for rejecting the doctrines of Christianity.

The querist then proceeds to direct personality, maintaining that, in common with Rammohun Roy, there are individuals in England, who regard the mind as God, and surrender themselves entirely to its suggestions; since they receive, he alleges, only such portions of the Bible as suit their convenience and reject the rest; and he confidently pronounces the doctrines which Rammohun Roy inculcates to be all atheistical. As these individuals must be better qualified than I can be to vindicate themselves from the charge of perverting the Scriptures, I need say nothing on this subject. I cannot, however, totally pass over the charge of atheism against the doctrines which I, in common with my friend, inculcate; and therefore beg to be allowed to make in this instance a few observations which may lead my readers to enter upon an impartial investigation and to compare the religious opinions which the followers of the Vedant maintain with those that the querist and his fellow Christians profess.

The querist probably means, that these individuals reject or misinterpret that portion of the Bible which relates to the Trinity and the atonement of Christ, both considered by the querist and his fellow-believers as the essential principles of Christianity. I have consequently attentively read the Bible of Christians; but to my great astonishment, I have been unable to find any explanation of the Trinity in that book. I have therefore directed my attention to their creed and some of the works of celebrated Christian writers, in the former of which I find the Triune God thus explained:

"The Father is God, the Son is God, the Holy Ghost is God; and yet there are not three Gods but one God." I shall therefore submit to the querist and his fellow-believers cases exactly parallel to this doctrine, as differently viewed by learned Christians, and ask him whether he can ever persuade himself to admit their possibility?—1st. John is homo or a man, James is homo or a man, and Jacob is homo or a man, and yet there are not three homines or men but one man. 2nd. At the time when the whole human race, as stated in the Christian Scriptures, consisted of only three persons, it might have been, in like manner, asserted, that, "Adam is homo (or a person), Eve is homo (or a person) and Cain is homo (or a person); but there are not three homines (or persons) but one person," the three being included under the abstract notion of mankind. 3rd. The father is sacerdos (or a priest), the son is sacerdos (or a priest) and the grandson is sacerdos (or a priest), and yet there are not three sacerdotes (or priests) but one priest under an abstract notion of the "priesthood." 4th. Wisdom is qualitas (or a quality), power is qualitas (or a quality) and love is qualitas (or a quality) and yet there are not three qualitates (or qualities) but one quality. 5th. Creation is opus (or a work), Redemption is opus (or a work), Sanctification is opus (or a work), and yet there are not three opera or works, but one work.

I regret that notwithstanding very great mental exertions, I am unable to attain a comprehension of this Creed.

These missionary gentlemen have come out to this country in the expectation, that grown men should first give up the use of their external senses, and should profess seriously, that although the Father is ONE God and the Son is ONE God and the Holy Ghost is ONE God, yet that the number of Gods does not exceed ONE—a doctrine which although unintelligible to others, having been imbibed by these pious men with their mothers' milk, is of course as familiar to them as the idea of the animation of the stony goddess "Kali" is to an idolatrous Hindoo, by whom it has, in like manner, been acquired in his infancy.

A man does not, under various circumstances, always refuse to believe things that are beyond his comprehension; but he will find it very hard, if not utterly impossible, to believe what is diametrically opposite to his senses, to his experience, to the uniform course of nature, and to the first axioms of reason: to wit, that there is first the Father-Deity, who is distinctly and by himself God, omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent, that there is secondly the Son-Deity, who is distinctly and by himself God omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent, and that there is thirdly the Holy Ghost Deity, (in the neuter gender) which is distinctly and by itself God, omnipotent, omniscient, and omnipresent, yet in defiance of the immutable principles of mathematical science, that these Deities amount to no more than one.

Exclusive of the writings of the ancient and modern Popish Theologists and those of Dissenters from the Episcopal creed, I find, to my still greater surprise, in the works of some celebrated Christian writers, who are held as the most distinguished members of the Church of England, the most palpably contradictory explanation given of this Trinity, some of which I here notice.

First. Dr. Waterland, Dr. Taylor, and Archbishop Secker maintain that the Trinity consists of three distinct, independent, and equal persons constituting one and the same God; thus representing the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost as three distinct substances under one Godhead.

2ndly. Dr. Wallis was an advocate for the Sabellian hypothesis, and probably Archbishop Tillotson, holding that three persons in the Trinity are only three modes or relations, which the Deity bears to his creatures,—thus declaring the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost to be three qualities, existing of course in the abstract notion of the God-head, which exists only in our imagination.

3rdly. Bishop Pearson, as well as Bishop Bull, and Dr. Owen suppose the Father to be an underived and essential essence and the Son to have received every thing by communication from God the Father. "There can be but one person," (says Bishop Pearson), "originally of himself, subsisting in that infinite Being, because a plurality of more persons so subsisting would necessarily infer a multiplicity of Gods." "The Son possessed" (says he,) "the whole nature by communication not by participation and in such way that he was as really God as the father." i.e., this third explanation contradicts the first with regard to the original deity of the second and third persons, and is entirely opposed to the second explanation.

4thly. Bishop Burgess supposes the three persons of the Deity to make one God, but does not allow that these persons are three beings, urging that "the Scriptures declare that there is but only one God.—The same Scriptures declare that there are three omnipresent persons; but there cannot be two omnipresent beings; therefore the three omnipresent persons can be only one God." According to this hypothesis, the Trinity is made up of three persons, each of which is not a being, i.e., of three nonentities.

5thly. In the system of Dr. Thomas Burnet, the Father is held to be a self-existent Being, the Son, and the Holy Ghost dependent; and he thinks that divine perfections and worship may be ascribed to each; which somewhat resembles the Arian Creed.

6th. Mr. Baxter defines the three divine Persons to be Wisdom, Power, and Love and illustrates his meaning by the vital power, intellect and will in the soul of man, i.e., he compares the three persons with qualities—an opinion which resembles what was maintained by Sabellius and his followers.

7thly. Bishop Gastrell says "The three names of God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost must denote a three-fold difference or distinction belonging to God, but such as is consistent with the unity and simplicity of the divine nature, for each of these includes the whole idea of God and something more. So far as they express the nature of God, they all adequately and exactly signify the same. It is the additional signification, which makes all the distinction between them," i.e., according to Bishop Gastrell, "the Father includes the whole idea of God and something more; the son includes the whole idea of God and something more; the Holy Ghost includes the whole idea of God and something more: while altogether, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost make one entire God, and no more." Here this learned prelate introduces a new axiom, vis., that a part is greater than, or at least, equal to the whole.

8thly. According to Mr. Howe's theory, there are three distinct, intelligent hypostases, each having a distinct, intelligent nature, united in some inexplicable manner so as to make one God in somewhat the same way as the corporeal, sensitive, and intellectual faculties are united to form one man, i.e., he gives us to understand that the Godhead is something more than the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost in the same manner as a complete man is something more than the corporeal, sensitive and intellectual faculties.

9thly. Dr. Sherlock says, "The Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, are as really distinct Persons as Peter, James, and John, each of which is God. We must allow each Person to be a God. These three infinite minds are distinguished, just as three created minds are, by self-consciousness. And by mutual consciousness, each person of these has the whole wisdom, power and goodness of the other two." i.e., this divine sets forth a system of perfect polytheism; but does not, like the others, offer any apology for it.

10thly. Dr. Heber, the present Bishop of Calcutta, maintains that the second and third persons in the Trinity are no other than the angels Michael and Gabriel. It was the Second Person, who conversed with Moses from Mount Sinai, and the third person, who constituted the Jewish Shckinah.

The theory of the Godhead proposed by this pious and learned prelate, although it is at variance with the opinions of several other divines, must yet be gratifying to Hindoo Theologians, who have long cherished the doctrine of the Metempsychosis, or the transmigration of spirits from one body to another. Since, the belief in the Second Person of the Godhead, originally a mere spirit, taking at one time, according to this theory, the form of an Angel (Michael) and afterwards assuming the body of Man (Jesus Christ) by means of natural birth, which was effected, as is said, by the Virgin Mary and the angel Gabriel—countenances the doctrine of the migration of spirits from the bodies of superior to those of inferior creatures.

Are not these explanations of the Trinity, given by the persons most versed in the Scriptures, sufficient to puzzle any man, if not drive him to atheism? Supposing a Hindu or a Mussalman were ready and willing to embrace the Christian faith, would he not sincerely repent of his rashness, as soon as he discovered that the accounts of the essence of the Christian religion, given by the principal persons of the Church, are as opposite to each other as the west is to the east? Would he not be utterly astonished at the idea, that a nation who are so celebrated for their progress in the arts and sciences, for the enjoyment of political and civil liberty, and for their freedom of inquiry and discussion, should neglect their religious faith so much as to allow it still to stand upon the monstrously absurd basis of popery?^{*}

I myself, however, am not surprised at the many contradictory accounts they have given of the Trinity; because when the building is the mere creature of fancy, it is not to be expected that its architects should well agree in their description of its form and proportions. Nor do I wonder at this faith being forsaken by a great number of intelligent European gentlemen, whom the orthodox are fond of stigmatizing as Infidels, since it appears to me, that any person endowed with a moderate share of common sense, not entirely perverted by early prejudices thrust upon him in the helpless infancy of his mind, must be able to tear off the parti-coloured veil of sophistry from the face of this Creed and discover its real monstrosity.

Instead of stigmatizing those Gentlemen, the Missionaries ought, I think, to have thanked them gratefully, for the safe standing of the frail edifice of their extraordinary creed, since it is the indifference of a great number of learned Europeans about the religion which they from policy profess, accompanied with the bigoted adherence to Christianity imposed upon a considerable portion of men of the middling class, which, and which alone, has been hitherto the cause of the security of a faith contradictory to common sense and opposed to the evidence of the senses, in a nation so highly exalted by its literature.

Some well-meaning Christians plausibly argue, that, whether the doctrine of the Trinity be reasonable or not,—what does it signify, this being a mere matter of speculation,—if the practical parts of Christianity and its religious observances are salutary?

In the first place I wish to know, whether the Missionaries preach the practical parts of Christianity separately from the doctrine of the Trinity and that of the atonement, or whether, on the contrary, they do not consider these doctrines to be the fundamental principles of the Christian Faith, so that, no man can possibly benefit by the practical parts of Christianity, unless he is enabled to pervert his senses, so far as to believe in the truth of these doctrines? If the latter be the case, these well-meaning persons, will, I trust excuse the rejection of Christianity by the grown up natives of India, in consideration of the great difficulty or rather impossibility every one must encounter who attempts to enforce belief upon himself or upon others.

In the second place I take the liberty of asking these well-meaning Gentlemen, whether it is a matter of speculation to believe one to be three and three to be one? Whether it is a matter of opinion to bring ourselves to believe that a perfect man is perfect God, or in other words, that a complete man is not a man? Whether it is a matter of speculation to be convinced that an object confined to a small portion of the Earth comprehends literally all the fulness of the Deity bodily, and spreads over the whole universe? Is it also a matter of speculation that God whom Christians and their Scripture represent as mere spirit and as the author of the universe, was of the very seed of the Jewish Patriarch Abraham, and of the Jewish King David? If these be matters of opinion, what then are matters grossly repugnant to reason and contrary to fact? The almighty and eternal Being (according to these Christian theologians) was born, grew to manhood, suffered and died a shameful death. Does this signify nothing? Does it signify nothing to degrade our faculties and give up the use of our senses, while we are viewing the visible object of nature? If we do so in one thing, why not do it in another? If we set out on this irrational career, where are we to stop? May we not from the example set in Theology, lay aside the use of reason in other sciences also, and thereby impede the progress of knowledge and introduce incalculable evils into the world? I therefore hope that these Gentlemen will, after more mature consideration, discover the doctrine of the Trinity and the idea of a Mangod or Godman to be unnatural and pregnant with absurdity, and not a mere innocent speculation.

If British Missionaries are under an obligation to preach Christianity to the natives of India, they ought for the glory of their nation, holding so conspicuous a place among the people of the East, and also for the sake of their own characters as a Literary Body, to confine their instructions to the practical parts of Christianity, keeping entirely out of view the doctrine of the Trinity and the idea of a two or three fold nature of God and Man, or God, Man and Angel, which are, to say the least, very much calculated to lower the reputation of Britons both as a learned and as a religious people.

It is characteristic of protestant writers to expose to ridicule any other system of religion which they disapprove. For instance, some of their eminent writers have proceeded so far in attacking the doctrine of Transubstantiation maintained by the Catholics, as to apply to the bread which the Catholics consider as the real flesh of Christ, the epithet Panarius Deus or "Breaden God," &c.

Now I only beg to be allowed on this occasion to ask Protestant Gentlemen, who think themselves justified in believing that a human body was, by supernatural power, in a literal sense filled with all the fulness of the Godhead, how they can object so violently to the opinion entertained by the Catholics that a piece of bread by the same supernatural power is filled with divine spirit? And if they can apply to Catholics the term "Worshippers of a Breaden God," how can the professors of the Trinity disapprove of the terms "Worshippers of a Fleshly God, or Jew God" being applied to themselves.

Whoever, in fact is unable to perceive the wide distinction between supreme and eternal Being and a helpless mortal man, must surely confess, if endowed with the faculty of reason, that he had grossly abused it in contemplating the nature of the deity. The immense distance between the human and divine nature cannot be diminished by the efforts of any mortal; and therefore whoever accepts man, dead or alive, for his god, voluntarily sinks himself to the same unfathomable distance below the level of one of the human species. Should he then presume to claim the rank of man, he would thereby equalize his nature with that of his God and be justly chargeable with gross inconsistency. Indeed I do not see what can prevent his fellow-believers, or man-worshippers, from accusing him of blasphemy—in making himself equal with God; or how rational men can avoid viewing him as the victim of early prejudices—however many sciences he may have studied, however many books he may have written, whatever titles of learning may have been bestowed upon him and with whatever contempt he may affect to regard the genuine Brahmanical religion. I say, the genuine Brahmanical religion, taught by the Vedas, as interpreted by the inspired Manu, not the popular system of worship adopted by the multitude. If a Christian were to insist on considering the latter with all its corruptions as the standard of Hindooism, then a Hindoo would also be justified in taking as the standard of Christianity, the system of religion which almost universally prevailed in Europe previous to the fifteenth century of the Christian Era, and which is still followed by the majority of Christians (namely, Catholics, Greeks, Armenians) with all its idols, crucifixes, Saints, miracles, pecuniary absolutions from sins, trinity, transubstantiation, relics, holy water, and other idolatrous machinery.

With regard to the doctrine of the atonement, we are given to understand by Christians, that God the Father having been offended by the transgressions of the human race, resolved (though against the suggestion of his mercy) that he would not forgive them unless some adequate sacrifice were offered to him, so that his justice should not be disregarded through the influence of his mercy. Upon this resolution on the part of God the Father, God the Son having great compassion towards men guilty of sins unto death, took upon himself the human nature and offered to God the Father his own life as an adequate atonement, and thereby reconciled to the Father Deity as many men as would believe in the offer of his blood for the remission of sin.

The Missionary Gentlemen hereby maintain, that although God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost were equally merciful and just and equally averse to sin; yet the Father having a strict regard to the preservation of the balance of power between Mercy and Justice, did not suffer his Mercy to violate Justice, and insisted, that the sins of men should not be forgiven unless a human sacrifice were made to him. But the Son being more under the influence of mercy and totally regardless of justice, condescended to assume the human nature and to bear the punishment of their sin. Thus by offering himself as a sacrifice, he washed away their transgressions with his blood, without expecting any sacrifice to be made to him, for the satisfaction of his Justice; while God the Holy Ghost, again, took no part whatever in the performance of the sacrifice, either as the Satisfier or the Satisfied, and remained quite neutral. Hence, is it not evident, that God the Father is more strict about the observance of Justice than God the Son? and that God the Father was less liable to the influence of Mercy than God the Son? and that God the Holy Ghost manifested neither Mercy nor Justice in the sacrificial atonement? Do not these circumstances completely overthrow the doctrine which these Gentlemen preach, viz., that God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are equally just and merciful?

Secondly. They ascribe to God the attribute of justice according to the human notion of that attribute, i. e., as a just judge can never be so influenced by his mercy as to forgive a man guilty of capital crimes, without inflicting upon him the punishment of death; so God never can violate justice through the influence of his mercy in forgiving sins unto death, without inflicting extreme punishment. Supposing, then, for the sake of argument, that divine justice can be viewed according to the standard of the human notion of justice, I ask whether it is consistent with the human notion of justice to release millions of men each guilty of sins unto death, after inflicting death upon another person, (whether God or man) who never participated in their sins, even though that person had voluntarily proposed to embrace death? or whether it is not a great violation of justice, according to the human notion of it, to put an innocent person to a painful death for the transgressions of others, notwithstanding he, in his human capacity, manifested very great reluctance to that death, as is admitted in the account of the life of Jesus Christ in Matthew, Ch. XXVI, 37—39.

Thirdly. Sins are of two kinds, that is, sins against God merely, and sins against God and man, such as theft, robbery, deception, &c. I therefore wish to know whether it is not an entire disregard of justice, according to the human notion, that the sins committed against one person should be forgiven by another, without his consent to such pardon? Whether it is not an infringement of justice on the part of God the Son, according to the human notion of justice, to wash away with his blood the sins of theft, robbery, or murder committed by one man against others, and to disregard their individual sufferings? But if Christians really imagine that true believers in the vicarious sacrifice of Christ have their past sins as well against God as against man, washed away by his blood, are they not extremely presumptuous and culpable in inflicting punishment upon their fellow Christians for any crime they may have committed, knowing that atonement has already been made for it by the blood of their God, which was shed on the cross? Yet we every day see Christians inflict on one another severe punishment, for the sins committed by them, notwithstanding the remission of their sins through their faith in the vicarious sacrifice of Christ.

Fourthly. These Gentlemen believe, that the Son washes away the sins of those who place their faith in his vicarious sacrifice, and not of men in general. This shews that the act of pardoning the sins of men by God the Son, proceed from a reciprocal consideration, and not from his infinite mercy towards mankind. As according to this doctrine, millions of inhabitants of remote countries, islands and mountains, who never heard even the name of Christianity, have died in sin, ever since the time of the vicarious sacrifice offered by Christ, without having it in their power to enter into the necessary bargain for the forgiveness of their sins by offering, in return, their faith in the atonement made by Christ. But those who have been born in countries where they could readily acquire this faith, while they rely upon the possession of this as the means of purchasing their own salvation, inconsistently condemn such of their fellow-Christians as hope to be saved through a virtuous life and sincere repentance, accusing them of presumption and self-sufficiency in pretending to be saved by such merits. Yet it is evident that the former who boast of their faith, are the persons really guilty of pride and self-sufficiency, since for this single merit of theirs, they think themselves fully entitled to salvation; and at the same time they condemn and deprecate the merits of others, who nevertheless consider that both faith and good works proceed from the grace of God.

These Gentlemen are apt to find fault with and ascribe unreasonableness to every other system of religion, shutting entirely their eyes upon the total want of reason and rationality in the faith which they themselves profess and preach. For, is there any notion more unreasonable and conducive to immoral practices than the idea, that God has blood, and that that blood is offered by God to reconcile to God such men as, at any time during their lives, place faith in that blood of God, however guilty these men may be of offending God and injuring their fellow-creatures.

As to their attempts at the converting of Hindoos to the Christian Faith, these Teachers of strange doctrines may now have been convinced by experience, after the exertions of a quarter of a century, that no grown up native of India possessed of common sense and common honesty, will ever be persuaded to believe in their self-contradictory Creed, and that their religious efforts will be unavailing, unless they adopt, or be enabled to adopt, some unfair means for the promotion of Christianity. Since the Hindoo population in Bengal, from the circumstances of their early marriages, and their continual residence either at home or at an inconsiderable distance from their birth-place, and from the enjoyment of local comfort under the peaceful sway of the British nation, has been increasing with uncommon rapidity, and as they are, at the same time, prohibited from foreign trade by their religious prejudices, prevented from entering into the military service, owing to their habitual aversion to war, and do not now, as in former times, receive gifts of lands free from assessments which tended much to encourage an idle life, many families have already become very indigent and a greater number must, sooner or later, be reduced to poverty. It is therefore more than probable, that the most weak and needy among them may be induced, by the hope of wordly advantages, to sell their conscience and their religion, in the same manner as a great many Israelites have been persuaded to profess Christianity, by the severe policy, adopted towards Jews on the one hand, and the encouragement to apostatize, held out on the other, by Societies established in Europe for their conversion.

I shall now, in a few words, for the information of the Missionary Gentlemen, lay down our religious creed. In conformity with the Precepts of our ancient religion, contained in the Holy Vedanta, though disregarded by the generality of moderns, we look up to ONE BEING as the animating and regulating principle of the whole collective body of the universe, and as the origin of all individual souls which in a manner somewhat similar, vivify and govern their particular bodies ; and we reject Idolatry in every form and under whatsoever veil of sophistry it may be practised, either in adoration of an artificial, a natural, or an imaginary object. The divine homage which we offer, consists solely in the practice of Daya or benevolence towards each other, and not in a fanciful faith or in certain motions of the feet, legs, arms, head, tongue or other bodily organs, in pulpit or before a temple. Among other objects, in our solemn devotion, we frequently offer up our humble thanks to God, for the blessings of British Rule in India and sincerely pray, that it may continue in its beneficent operation for centuries to come.

ANSWER OF A HINDOO

"WHY DO YOU FREQUENT A UNITARIAN PLACE OF WORSHIP INSTEAD OF THE NUMER-
OUSLY ATTENDED ESTABLISHED CHURCHES?"

ANSWER OF A HINDOO

To the question, "Why do you frequent a Unitarian place of worship, instead of the numerously attended established Churches?"

I. Because the prayers read, worship offered, and sermons preached in the Unitarian place of worship remind me of the infinitely wise Ruler of this infinite universe, without ascribing to him as Churchmen do, fellow-creators or co-operators equal in power and other attributes. My plain understanding, though it can comprehend the idea of fellow-creatures, is incapable of forming a notion of one or more fellow-creators each equally possessed of omnipotence and omnipresence.

II. Because Unitarian prayer, worship, and preaching constantly put me in mind of the beneficial design kept in view by the wise and benevolent Author of all, in organizing the members of the animal body, such as bones, veins, vessels, limbs, &c., and in preparing the manifold necessities of life for our maintenance, as proofs of his gratuitous blessing and free grace; while in those Churches he is declared to have refused mercy and salvation to mankind until innocent blood was offered him to appease his wrath.

III. Because the Unitarian mode of worship exhibits how that infinite and Supreme author has designedly stationed the heavenly bodies, in systematic order, capable of producing and nourishing all the animal and vegetable objects under his divine control; while in those Churches that infinite being is represented as occupying a small space in this limited world, lying in a still smaller space in the womb of a virgin, subject to the control of his parents, though for a season, and daily performing the various animal functions.

IV. Because I feel already weary of the doctrine of "Man-God" or "God-Man"* frequently inculcated by the Brahmans, in pursuance of their corrupt traditions: the same doctrine of Man-God, though preached by another body of priests better dressed, better provided for and eminently elevated by virtue of conquest cannot effectually tend to excite my anxiety or curiosity to listen to it.

* Manu, Dattatraya, Rama, &c., &c., &c.

V. Because I have expressed my disgust, when I heard from the Brahmans the incredible story that God appeared in the form of a party-coloured kite, to accomplish certain purposes. While I maintain the same reverence for the Divine Being, I must be excused believing a similar doctrine held forth in those Churches, as to the appearance of God, on another occasion, in the bodily shape of a dove. I wonder to observe, that from a denial of the existence of God some are stigmatized with the term atheist; while others are highly respected, though they do not scruple, under the shield of religion, to bring the Deity into ridicule, by representing him in the form even of a common bird.

VI. Because having been taught in the schools, where the doctrine of the Incarnations of a two-fold or even of a three-fold * nature has been solemnly preached, I perceive no novelty in the idea of a two-fold nature, divine and human, as entertained and expressed in those Churches.

VII. Because in those Churches, the Holy Ghost is represented as the very God and not as the miraculous power of the Deity, at the same time that the language applied there to this person of the God-head; such as "she was found with child of the Holy Ghost," "The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee"† fully corresponds to the words and ideas used for the deity in the western and eastern heathen mythologies, and consequently must be offensive to the feelings of those who ascribe to God purity and perfection.

VIII. Because the doctrine of the trinity inculcated in those Churches, consisting of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, is defensible on the plea of mystery; while the Trinity preached to us by the Brahmans is a representation of the three principle attributes of the deity in an allegorical sense, and does therefore deserve some momentary attention. The mind which rejects the latter as a production of the fancy, cannot be reasonably expected to adopt the former.

IX. Because Unitarians reject polytheism and idolatry under every sophistical modification, and thereby discountenance all the evil consequences resulting from them.

X. Because Unitarians believe, profess, and inculcate the doctrine of the divine unity—a doctrine which I find firmly maintained both by the Christian Scriptures and by our most ancient writings commonly called the Vedas.

Such are my reasons for attending the Unitarian place of worship instead of the established Churches.

A small tract in Sanskrit with a translation into Bengalee has of late been published by a Hindoo Theologian, Sivaprasad Sarma, on the subject of modes of worship with or without images. Having found it to exhibit views of the Hindoo religion somewhat different from those which are commonly entertained by Europeans, I have prepared a translation of it into English with some explanatory notes, which I beg to submit to the English reader.

TRANSLATION OF A SANSKRIT TRACT

QUERY.

In some Sastras many authorities are found enjoining worship by means of idols; in others are passages dissuading from such worship. Doubts having hence arisen, may the learned be pleased to remove them?

(Signed) Ramdhan Sarma.

REPLY.

In answer to the subject of this query the decision which is given, in the essence of all the Sastras (the Bhagavata), by that great and worshipful Saint (Vyasa) who had a thorough knowledge of all the Vedas, seems sufficient to remove these doubts entirely. It is as follows (according to the gloss of Sridhara): "Man shall worship me the Lord of the Universe by means of an image or any other form, during the intervals of leisure from the performance of the ritual observances prescribed for the class to which he belongs, until he becomes conscious that I dwell in all beings." The worshipful and revered Sridhara commenting upon this text, adds here:—"This verse shews that worship by means of an idol or any other form is not absolutely useless; and that as long as a man is subjected to worship by means of idols, he is also subjected to perform the ritual observances prescribed to his own class." This passage limits the period of idol worship and explains what practices are its necessary accompaniments.

Vyasa, then proceeds:—"Further, man, by charity to the needy, by honour to others, by friendship, and by an equal regard to all,

* "It (the tract) was written in Sanskrit by Rammohun Roy under the name of Shivprasad Shurma, and it was translated into English, with English annotations, by Rammohun Roy under the name of 'A Friend of the author.'" The Life and Letters of Raja Rammohun Roy, by Miss Collet, p. 74.

"shall direct his worship to me who, by residing in the heart, dwell in

Vyasa continues in six and a half verses beginning with the following verse, "Animate objects are preferable to inanimate," &c. ; and ending with the following sentence, "He to whom these four duties are prescribed in the above text shall, mentally, do reverence and profess much respect to all creatures, according to the different degrees of their visible excellences." He (Vyasa) then concludes:—Man shall respect them "by observing that the all-powerful Lord is in the heart watching over the soul."† Hence the author himself explains that the observance of "an equal regard to all" creatures directed in the above verse is in reference to their being equally related to the divine Spirit and not in reference to their qualities or identities.

It follows therefore that passages enjoining worship by means of forms, and passages dissuading from such worship, should be separately applied to those who entertain those different sentiments.‡

* Spiritual Devotion is of two kinds. The first consists in meditation on the soul being of divine origin. A continuance of such meditation is believed to have a tendency to rescue the soul from all human feelings and passions, and thereby the soul is ultimately brought to its original divine perfection far surpassing both human search and description. This is the state which is commonly called absorption. The devotees who adhere to this mode of devotion being supposed naturally incapable of committing any moral or social crime, are not subjected to the precepts or prohibitions found in the Sastras.

The second kind of devotion consists in believing that the Deity is possessed of all the attributes of perfection such as omnipresence, omnipotence, &c., and that the individual sentient soul is, in its present state of material connection, separate from, and dependent on, the Deity. Besides, the practice of charity, &c., as mentioned in this text are enjoined on the performers of this mode of devotion as their religious duties. This class of devotees enjoy, after death, eternal beatitude in the highest heaven, as existences separate from the deity and from each other, while worshippers by means of forms, as the Vedanta affirms, enjoy only temporary bliss.

From what I have noticed as to the two kinds of notions entertained respecting spiritual devotion, the reader will perceive the reason why a teacher of spiritual knowledge sometimes is justified in speaking of the Deity in the first person, in reference to the assumed divine nature of his soul, although in the same discourse, he again treats of God in the third person, in reference to the present separated and subordinate state of the soul.

† "Two birds, co-habitant and co-essential, reside unitedly in one tree which is the body. One of them (the soul) consumes the variously tasted fruits of its actions: but the other (God) without partaking of them, witnesses all events." Mundakopanishad, ch. the 3rd.

"God as being resplendent and most proximate to all creatures is styled the operator in the heart." Mundaka the second, Section the 2nd.

‡ Under the Christian dispensation, worship through matter seems unauthorised; John ch: IV. v. 21: "The hour cometh when ye shall, neither in this mountain, nor yet at Jerusalem, worship the Father, &c." 23: "But the hour cometh and now is, when the true worshippers shall worship the Father in Spirit and in truth," &c.; although in the Judaical religion such worship was sanctioned, as appears from the Books of Leviticus and others, and even from the above quoted verses of the Gospel of John.

HUMBLE SUGGESTIONS.*

Those who firmly believe on the authority of the Vedas, that "God is ONE only without an equal," and that "He cannot be known either through the medium of language, thought, or vision: how can he be known except as existing, the origin and support of the universe?"—and who endeavour to regulate their conduct by the following precept, "He who is desirous of eternal happiness should regard another as he regards himself, and the happiness and misery of another as his own," ought to manifest the warmest affection towards such of their own countrymen as maintain the same faith and practice, even although they have not all studied the Vedas for themselves, but have professed a belief in God only through an acquaintance with their general design. Many among the ten classes of Sannyasis, and all the followers of Guru Nanak, of Dadu, and of Kabir, as well as of Santa, &c., profess the religious sentiments abovementioned. It is our unquestionable duty invariably to treat them as brethren. No doubt should be entertained of their future salvation, merely because they receive instructions, and practise their sacred music, in the vernacular dialect. For Yajnavalkya, with a reference to those who cannot sing the Hymns of the Vedas, has said, "The divine hymns Rik, Gatha, Panika, and Dakshabihita, should be sung; because by their constant use man attains supreme beatitude." "He who is skilled in playing on the lute (vina), who is intimately acquainted with the various tones and harmonies, and who is able to beat time in music, will enter without difficulty upon the road of salvation." Again the Siva Dharma as quoted by Raghunandana, says, "He is reputed a Guru who according to the capacity of his disciple instructs him in Sanskrit whether pure or corrupt, in the current language of the country, or by any other means."

Amongst foreigners, those Europeans who believe God to be in every sense ONE, and worship HIM ALONE in spirit, and who extend their benevolence to man as the highest service to God, should be regarded by us with affection, on the ground of the object of their worship being the same as ours. We should feel no reluctance to co-operate with them in religious matters, merely because they consider Jesus Christ as the Messenger of God and their Spiritual Teacher ; for oneness in the object of worship and sameness of religious practice should produce attachment between the worshippers.

Amongst Europeans, those who believe Jesus Christ to be God himself, and conceive him to be possessed of a particular form, and maintain Father, Son, and Holy Ghost to be one God, should not be treated in an unfriendly manner. On the contrary, we should act towards them in the same manner as we act towards those of our countrymen who, without forming any external image, meditate upon Rama and other supposed incarnations, and believe in their unity.

Again, those amongst Europeans who believing Jesus Christ to be the Supreme Being moreover construct various images of him, should not be hated. On the contrary, it becomes us to act towards those Europeans in the same manner as we act towards such as believe Rama, &c., to be incarnations of God, and form external images of them. For the religious principle of the two last-mentioned sects of foreigners are one and the same with those of the two similar sects among Hindoos, although they are clothed in a different garb.

When any belonging to the second and third classes of Europeans endeavour to make converts of us, the believers in the only living and true God, even then we should feel no resentment towards them, but rather compassion, on account of their blindness to the errors into which they themselves have fallen : since it is almost impossible, as every day's experience teaches us, for men, when possessed of wealth and power, to perceive their own defects.

AUTOBIOGRAPHICAL SKETCH.*

MY DEAR FRIEND,

In conformity with the wish, you have frequently expressed, that I should give you an outline of my life, I have now the pleasure to give you the following very brief sketch:—

My ancestors were Brahmins of a high order, and, from time immemorial, were devoted to the religious duties of their race, down to my fifth progenitor, who about one hundred and forty years ago gave up spiritual exercises for worldly pursuits and aggrandisement. His descendants ever since have followed his example, and, according to the usual fate of courtiers, with various success, sometimes rising to honour and sometimes falling; sometimes rich and sometimes poor; sometimes excelling in success, sometimes miserable through disappointment. But my maternal ancestors, being of the sacerdotal order by profession as well as by birth, and of a family than which none holds a higher rank in that profession, have up to the present day uniformly adhered to a life of religious observances and devotion, preferring peace and tranquility of mind to the excitements of ambition, and all the allurements of worldly grandeur.

In conformity with the usage of my paternal race, and the wish of my father, I studied the Persian and Arabic languages, these being indispensable to those who attached themselves to the courts of the Mahommedan princes; and agreeably to the usage of my maternal relations, I devoted myself to the study of the Sanskrit and the theological works written in it, which contain the body of Hindoo literature, law and religion.

* Miss Carpenter thus introduced this Autobiographical Sketch into her book, 'The Last Days in England of the Rajah Rammohun Roy':—

"The following letter from Rammohun Roy himself first appeared in the 'Athenæum,' and in the 'Literary Gazette;' from one or other of which it was copied into various newspapers. It was written just before he went to France. It was probably designed for some distinguished person who had desired him to give an outline of his history, and he adopted this form for the purpose. The letter may be considered as addressed to his friend, Mr. Gordon, of Calcutta."

Miss Collet calls it "the spurious 'autobiographical letter' published by Sandford Arnot in the Athenæum of October 5, 1833."—Ed.

When about the age of sixteen, I composed a manuscript calling in question the validity of the idolatrous system of the Hindoos. This, together with my known sentiments on that subject, having produced a coolness between me and my immediate kindred, I proceeded on my travels, and passed through different countries, chiefly within, but some beyond, the bounds of Hindoostan, with a feeling of great aversion to the establishment of the British power in India. When I had reached the age of twenty, my father recalled me, and restored me to his favour; after which I first saw and began to associate with Europeans, and soon after made myself tolerably acquainted with their laws and form of government. Finding them generally more intelligent, more steady and moderate in their conduct, I gave up my prejudice against them, and became inclined in their favour, feeling persuaded that their rule, though a foreign yoke, would lead more speedily and surely to the amelioration of the native inhabitants; and I enjoyed the confidence of several of them even in their public capacity. My continued controversies with the Brahmins on the subject of their idolatry and superstition, and my interference with their custom of burning widows, and other pernicious practices, revived and increased their animosity against me; and through their influence with my family, my father was again obliged to withdraw his countenance openly, though his limited pecuniary support was still continued to me.

After my father's death I opposed the advocates of idolatry with still greater boldness. Availing myself of the art of printing, now established in India, I published various works and pamphlets against their errors, in the native and foreign languages. This raised such a feeling against me, that I was at last deserted by every person except two or three Scotch friends, to whom, and the nation to which they belong, I always feel grateful.

The ground which I took in all my controversies was, not that of opposition to Brahminism, but to a perversion of it; and I endeavoured to show that the idolatry of the Brahmins was contrary to the practice of their ancestors, and the principles of the ancient books and authorities which they profess to revere and obey. Notwithstanding the violence of the opposition and resistance to my opinions, several highly respectable persons, both among my own relations and others, began to adopt the same sentiments.

I now felt a strong wish to visit Europe, and obtain by personal observation, a more thorough insight into its manners, customs, religion, and political institutions. I refrained, however, from carrying this intention into effect until the friends who coincided in my sentiments should be increased in number and strength. My expectations having been at length realised, in November, 1830, I embarked for England, as the discussion of the East India Company's charter was expected to come on, by which the treatment of the natives of India, and its future government, would be determined for many years to come, and an appeal to the King in Council, against the abolition of the practice of burning widows, was to be heard before the Privy Council; and his Majesty the Emperor of Delhi had likewise commissioned me to bring before the authorities in England certain encroachments on his rights by the East India Company. I accordingly arrived in England in April, 1831.

I hope you will excuse the brevity of this sketch, as I have no leisure at present to enter into particulars, and

RAMMOHUN ROY.

INTRODUCTION.*

SEVERAL of my friends having expressed a wish to be possessed of copies of my Translation of the Vedas, and Controversies with those Brahmins who are advocates for idolatry, I have collected for republication such of those tracts as I could find, either among my own papers or those of my friends who happened to have brought them from India, and now offer them to the public in their original form.

I feel induced to set forth here, briefly, the substance of these writings, to facilitate the comprehension, of their purport, as being foreign to the generality of European readers. The Vedas (or properly speaking, the spiritual parts of them) uniformly declare, that man is prone by nature, or by habit, to reduce the object or objects of his veneration and worship (though admitted to be unknown) to tangible forms, ascribing to such objects attributes, supposed excellent according to his own notions : whence idolatry, gross or refined, takes its origin, and perverts the true course of the intellect to vain fancies. These authorities, therefore, hold out precautions against framing a deity after human imagination, and recommend mankind to direct all researches towards the surrounding objects, viewed either collectively or individually, bearing in mind their regular, wise and wonderful combinations and arrangements, since such researches cannot fail, they affirm, to lead an unbiassed mind to a notion of a Supreme Existence, who so sublimely designs and disposes of them, as is everywhere traced through the universe. The same Vedas represent rites and external worship addressed to the planets and elementary objects, or personified abstract notions, as well as to deified heroes, as intended for persons of mean capacity ; but enjoin spiritual devotion, as already described, benevolence, and self-control, as the only means of securing bliss.

RAMMOHUN ROY.

P. S.—In all the following Translations, except the Cena Upanishad, the mode of spelling Sanskrit words in English, adopted by Dr. J. B. Gilchrist, has been observed.

*This Introduction appears in the 'Translation of several principal Books, Passages, and Texts of the Veds, and of some controversial works on Brahminical Theology,' which Rammohun Roy published in London in 1832.—Ed.

LONDON:
SMITH ELDER & Co., CORNHILL,
1832.

THE Select Committee of the House of Commons which was appointed in February, 1831, and re-appointed in June to consider the renewal of the Company's Charter, invited Raja Rammohun Roy to appear before it. He declined this request, but tendered his evidence in the form of successive "Communications to the Board of Control," which besides duly appearing in the Blue Books were published by him in a separate volume, entitled Exposition of the practical operation of the Judicial and Revenue Systems of India, etc. We have omitted the map which the author annexed to this volume.—Ed.

PRELIMINARY REMARKS.

INDIA, anciently called the "Bharata Varsha"* after the name of a monarch called "Bharata"† is bounded on its south by the sea; on the east partly by this sea, and partly by ranges of mountains separating it from the ancient China, or rather the countries now called Assam, Cassay and Arracan; on the north by a lofty and extensive chain of mountains which divides it from Tibet; and on the west partly by ranges of mountains, separating India from the ancient Persia, and extending towards the Western Sea, above the mouth of the Indus, and partly by this sea itself. It lies between the 8th and 35th degrees of north latitude, and the 67th and 93rd degrees of east longitude.‡

Wide tracts of this empire were formerly ruled by different individual princes, who, though politically independent of, and hostile to each other, adhered to the same religious principles, and commonly observed the leading rites and ceremonies taught in the Sanskrit language, whether more or less refined. These tracts of land

* "Varsha" implies a large tract of continent, cut off from other countries by natural boundaries, such as oceans, mountains, or extensive deserts.

‡ The boundary mountains are interrupted on the east between 90° and 91° E. and lat. 26° and 27° N. Hence the countries to the east of the Brahmaputra, as Assam, Ava, Siam, &c., as far as 102° E. long. are by some authors considered as part of India, though beyond its natural limits; and by European writers usually called "India beyond the Ganges." There, relics of Sanskrit literature, and remains of Hindu temples are still found. Other ancient writers, however, considered these countries as attached to China, the inhabitants having greater resemblance to the Chinese in features.

The western boundary mountains are in like manner broken at long. 70° East, and at lat. 34° North. Consequently the countries beyond that natural limit, such as Cabul and Candahar, are supposed by some to be included in India, and by others in Persia. But many Hindu antiquities still exist there to corroborate the former notion.—Not only the northern boundary mountains of India, but also those mountains which form the eastern and western limits of it, are by the ancient writers on India, termed Himalaya, and considered branches of that great chain. "In the north direction is situated the prince of mountains, the 'immortal Himalaya' which immersing both in the eastern and western seas, stands on earth as a standard of measure (or line of demarcation)".

The part styled "the civilized," in the sacred writings of the Brahmins, consists of two large divisions.*

The first is called "the civilized and sacred land;"† which, extending from the banks of the Indus at 34° north and 72° 25' east, in a south-easterly direction, along the foot of the Himalaya mountains as far as 26° 30' north and 87° 30' east, lies between this line and the northern limits of the Vindhya range, which runs from 22° north and 73° east, to 25° north and 87° 30' east, through Rajpootana, Behar, Benares, the Provinces of Allahabad, and of Malwa, along the north side of the Nerbudda, almost to the west coast of India. The second division is named merely "the civilized land," and is situated between the eastern and western coasts, terminating towards the east at the mouth of the Ganges, about 22° north, and 87° 30' east, and on the west towards the mouth of the Indus, at nearly 22° north, and 72° 30' east, comprehending the large province of Gujrat.

The countries situated beyond the limits of the civilized lands, as above described, whether mountains, valleys, or low lands, though included within the Bharata Varsha, are declared to have been chiefly inhabited by Mlechchhas, or barbarians, and were therefore called barbarous countries.‡

In consequence of the multiplied divisions and sub-divisions of the land into separate and independent kingdoms, under the authority

* Manu, the most ancient authority, thus defines their limits. "The lands lying as far as the eastern and as far as the western oceans, and between the mountains just mentioned (Himalaya and Vindhya) are known to the wise by the name of "Aryavarta" or the land inhabited by respectable people." (Ch. II., v. 22.)

In his translation of this passage, Sir William Jones, by omitting to refer to the commentary, which substitutes the copulative Sanskrit particle "Cha" for "Eva," has thus translated this passage: "As far as the eastern and as far as the western oceans, between the two mountains just mentioned, lies the tract which the wise have named Aryavarta." This rendered the description obscure, if not wholly unintelligible; since the countries lying between these two ranges of mountains, are scarcely situated between the eastern and western seas.

† Because this division includes within it the tract which is called the Sacred Land, situated to the north of Delhi, thus described by Manu: "Between the two divine rivers Saraswati and Drishadvati, lies the tract of land which the sages have named Brahnavarta, because it was frequented by gods."

of numerous princes hostile towards each other,* and owing to the successive introduction of a vast number of castes and sects, destroying every texture of social and political unity, the country, (or, properly speaking, such parts of it as were contiguous to foreign lands), was at different periods invaded, and brought under temporary subjection to foreign princes, celebrated for power and ambition.

About 900 years ago, the Mahomedan princes, advancing by the north-west, began to ravage and overrun the country; and after continued efforts, during several centuries, they succeeded in conquering the best parts of India. Their rule was transferred in succession from one dynasty of conquerors to another (Ghazni, Ghor, and Afghan), till 1525 of the Christian era, when prince Babar, a descendant of Timur (or Tamerlane), in the fifth generation, established his throne in the centre of Hindustan. His offspring (the Moghul dynasty) exercised the uncontrolled sovereignty of this empire† for nearly two centuries (with the exception of about sixteen years), under a variety of changes, according to the rise or decrease of their power.

In the year 1712, the star of the Moghul ascendancy inclined towards descent, and has since gradually sunk below the horizon. The princes oftener consulted their own personal comfort than the welfare of the state, and relied for success on the fame of their dynasty, rather than on sound policy and military valor. Not only their crowns, but their lives also, depended on the good will of the nobles, who virtually assumed independence of the sovereign power, and each sought his own individual aggrandisement.

At present, all the southern and eastern, as well as several of the western provinces of the empire, have gradually fallen into the possession of the English. The army they employed chiefly consisted of the natives of India, a country into which the notion of patriotism has never made its way. Those territories were in fact transferred to British possession from the rule of a number of the rebellious nobility. While the greatest part of the northern provinces beyond the river Sutlej has fallen into the hands of Runjeet Singh, the chief of a tribe commonly called Sikhs.

* Compare the feeble state of Persia when ruled by several independent princes, with the formidable power she enjoyed when consolidated under the empire of the Sufts.

Direct your attention to a still nearer country, I mean England: and compare the consequences formerly arising from her divided resources, with her present state of elevation under the subsisting union.

† It may be considered as consisting of the following twenty provinces: Delhi, Lahore, Cashmere, Cabul, Candahar, Ajmere, Multan, Gujrat, Agra, Oudh, Allahabad, Behar, Bengal, Orissa, Malwah, Khandesh, Berar, Aurungabad, Golconda, Bejapoor.

Akbar the Second, present heir and representative of the imperial house of Timur, enjoys only the empty title of "King of Delhi," without either royal prerogative or power.

Runjeet Singh, sovereign of north-western India (consisting of Lahore, Multan, Cashmere, and Eastern Cabul), is considered highly gifted with prudence and moderation, and apparently inclined towards liberal principles; judicious in the discharge of public duties, and affable in private intercourse. The idea of constitutional government being entirely foreign to his mind, he has necessarily followed the same system of arbitrary rule which has been for ages prevailing in the country. The government he has established, although it be purely military, is nevertheless mild and conciliatory.

With regard to the circumstances under which a body of respectable English merchants (commonly known by the name of the Honourable East India Company) first obtained their Charter of Privileges in 1600, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, to carry on trade with the East Indies; and with respect to the particulars of their success in procuring from the Emperor of Hindustan (Jahangir), and from several of his successors permission to establish commercial factories, as well as the enjoyment of protection, and various privileges in that country; with relation further to their conquests, which commenced about the middle of the 18th century have extended over the greater part of India,—conquests principally owing to the dissensions and pusillanimous conduct of the native princes and chiefs, as well as to the ignorance existing in the East, of the modern improvements in the art of war, combined with the powerful assistance afforded to the Company by the naval and military forces of the crown of England,—I refer the reader to the modern histories of India,* such particulars and details being quite foreign to the object which I have for the present in view.

The government of England, in the meantime, received frequent intimations of the questionable character of the means by which their acquisitions had been obtained and conquests achieved, and of the abuse of power committed by the Company's servants,* who were sent out to India from time to time to rule the territory thus acquired; and the impression in consequence was that the immense, or rather incalculable, distance, between India and England, impeding intercourse between the natives of the two countries, and the absence of efficient local check on the exercise of power by the Company's executive officers, as well as the hope of support from their influential employers in England, might lead many of them to neglect or violate their duties and bring reproach on the national character. Under these apprehensions the British Parliament in 1773, by 13th Geo. III, commonly called the Regulating Act, declared that all territorial acquisitions by conquest or treaty belong to the state, directed that all correspondence connected with their civil or military government should be submitted to the consideration of the Ministers; and subsequently in 1784, (by act 24th Geo. III. cap. 25) a Board of Commissioners was established by the crown as a control over the East India Company and the executive officers in India. The Board consists of a president, who usually has a seat in the British cabinet, and of several members, honorary and otherwise, with a secretary and other requisite subordinate officers. This institution has answered the purpose as far regards subjects of a general nature.

The system of rule introduced and acted on in India by the executive officers of the Company, previous to 1793, was of a mixed nature—European and Asiatic. The established usages of the country were for the most part adopted as the model of their conduct, in the discharge of political, revenue, and judicial functions, with modification at the discretion of the local authority. In addition to the exercise of the sovereign power, power declared through policy to have been vested in them by the throne of Delhi, they continued to act in their commercial capacity with greater success than previous to their sovereignty.† In consideration of the extensive territories acquired by the Company in different parts of India, they deemed it advisable to establish three governments at the three presidencies of

* They were generally relations and friends of the leading members of the company, twenty-four in number, called the "Directors," first elected in 1709, and invested by the general body of the company with the power of managing their territorial possessions in India, as well as their commerce in the East and West.

Bengal, Madras and Bombay; the two latter being, since, 1773, subordinate to the first in matters of a political nature.

The Marquis of Cornwallis, a straight-forward honest statesman, assumed the reins of government in Bengal in 1786.* He succeeded not only in consolidating the British power in its political relations in those remote regions, but also in introducing, in 1793, material changes in every department, particularly in the revenue and judicial systems. These changes approximating to the institutions existing in England, are calculated to operate beneficially, if regularly reduced to practice.

As my evidence respecting the government of India which will form the main body of this treatise gives a particular account of the practical operation of these systems, I refrain from a repetition of it in this place.

From occasionally directing my studies to the subjects and events peculiarly connected with Europe, and from an attentive though partial, practical observation in regard to some of them, I felt impressed with the idea, that in Europe literature was zealously encouraged and knowledge widely diffused; that mechanics were almost in a state of perfection, and politics in daily progress; that moral duties were, on the whole, observed with exemplary propriety notwithstanding the temptations incident to a state of high and luxurious refinement; and that religion was spreading, even amid scepticism and false philosophy.

I was in consequence continually making efforts for a series of years, to visit the Western World, with a view to satisfy myself on those subjects by personal experience. I ultimately succeeded in surmounting the obstacles to my purpose, principally of a domestic nature; and having sailed from Calcutta on the 19th of November, 1830, I arrived in England on the 8th of April following. The particulars of my voyage and travels will be found in a Journal which I intend to publish; together with whatever has appeared to me most worthy of remark and record in regard to the intelligence, riches and power, manners, customs, and especially the female virtue and excellence existing in this country.

* Since the formation of the Board of Commissioners for the affairs of India, the Crown has exercised the right of selection in regard to the Governor-General to be nominated by the Company.

The question of the renewal of the Honorable East India Company's Charter* being then under the consideration of the Government, and various individuals connected with India having been examined as witnesses on the subject, the authorities wished me also, as a native of that country, to deliver my evidence ; which was, in consequence, given as in the following pages.

Although it has been printed among the other minutes of evidence taken before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, I deem it proper to publish it in a separate form, for the purpose of prefixing these preliminary explanations, and of accompanying it with notes and replies to remarks made thereon, by persons whose opinions are deserving of notice.

*The Company's Charter was last renewed by the Crown in 1813, with certain modifications, for a period of twenty years, and consequently expires in 1833, unless previously renewed.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

ON THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM OF INDIA.

1. Question. Have you observed the operation of the Judicial System in India?

Answer. I have long turned my attention towards the subject, and possess a general acquaintance with the operation of that system, more particularly from personal experience in the Bengal presidency, where I resided.

2. Q. Do you think that the system hitherto acted upon is calculated to secure justice?

A. The judicial system established in 1793, by Lord Cornwallis, was certainly well adapted to the situation of the country, and to the character of the people as well as of the Government, had there been a sufficient number of qualified Judges to discharge the judicial office, under a proper code of laws.

3. Q. Explain particularly in what points you consider the practical operation of the system defective.

A. In the want of a sufficient number of judges and magistrates, in the want of adequate qualification in many of them to discharge the duty in foreign languages, and in the want of a proper code of laws, by which they might be easily guided.

4. Q. Can you explain what evils result from the want of a greater number of judges?

A. 1st: The courts being necessarily few in number in comparison to the vast territories under the British rule, many of the Judges are situated at so great a distance from them, that the poorer classes are in general unable to go and seek redress for any injury, particularly those who may be oppressed by their wealthier neighbours, possessing great local influence. 2ndly: The business of the courts is so heavy that causes often accumulate to such an extent, that many are necessarily pending some years before they can be decided; an evil which is aggravated by subsequent appeals from one court to another, attended with further delay and increased expense. By this state of things wrong-doers are encouraged, and the innocent and oppressed in the same proportion discouraged, and often reduced to despair. 3rdly: Such a mass of business transacted in foreign languages being too much for any one individual, even the ablest and best-intentioned judge, may be disheartened at seeing before him a file of causes which he can hardly hope to overtake; and he may therefore be thus induced to transfer a great part of the business to his native officers, who are not responsible, and who are so meanly paid for their services, that they may be expected to consult their own interests.

5. Q. Will you inform us what evils arise from the want of due qualification in the judges?

A. It is but justice to state that many of the judicial officers of the company are men of the highest talents, as well as of strict integrity, and earnestly intent on doing justice. However, not being familiar with the laws of the people over whom they are called to administer justice by these laws, and the written proceedings of the court, answers, replies, rejoinders, evidence taken, and documents produced, being all conducted in a language which is foreign to them, they must either rely greatly on the interpretation of their native officers, or be guided by their own surmises or conjectures. In the one case, the cause will be decided by those who in point of rank and pay are so meanly situated, and who are not responsible to the government or public for the accuracy of the decision; in the other case, a decision founded on conjecture must be very liable to error. Still, I am happy to observe that there are some judicial officers, though very few in number, whose judgment and knowledge of the native languages are such, that in cases which do not involve much intricacy and legal subtlety, they are able to form a correct decision independent of the natives around them.

6. Q. Can you point out what obstructions to the administration of justice are produced by the want of a better code of laws?

A. The regulations published from year to year by the local government since 1793, which serve as instructions to the courts, are so voluminous, complicated, and in many instances, either too concise or too exuberant, that they are generally considered not a clear and easy guide; and the Hindu and Mahomedan laws administered in conjunction with the above regulations, being spread over a great number of different books of various and sometimes doubtful authority, the judges, as to law points, depend entirely on the interpretations of their native lawyers, whose conflicting legal opinions have introduced great perplexity into the administration of justice.

7. Q. Is there any other impediment to the fair administration of justice besides those you have stated?

A. The first obstacle to the administration of justice is, that its administrators and the persons among whom it is administered have no common language. 2ndly, That owing partly to this cause and also in a great measure to the difference of manners, &c., the communication between these two parties is very limited; in consequence of which the judges can with the utmost difficulty acquire an adequate knowledge of the real nature of the grievances of the persons seeking redress, or of the real character and validity of the evidence by which their claims are supported or opposed. 3rdly, That there is not the same relation between the native pleaders and the judge as between the British bar and the bench. 4thly, The want of publicity owing to the absence of reports and of a public press, to take notice of the proceedings of the courts in the interior: consequently there is no superintendence of public opinion to watch whether the judges attend their courts once a day or once a week, or whether they attend to business six hours or one hour a day, or their mode of treating the parties, the witnesses, the native pleaders or law officers, and others attending the courts, as well as the principles on which they conduct their proceedings and regulate their decisions; or whether in fact they investigate and decide the causes themselves, or leave the judicial business to their native officers and dependants. (In pointing out the importance of the fullest publicity being afforded to judicial proceedings by means of the press, I have no reference to the question of a free press, for the discussion of local politics, a point on which I do not mean to touch.) 5thly, The great prevalence of perjury, arising partly from the frequency with which oaths are administered in the courts, having taken from them the awe with which they were formerly regarded, partly from the judges being often unable to detect imposture in a foreign language, and to discriminate nicely the value of evidence amongst a people with whom they have in general so little communication; and partly from the evidence being frequently taken, not by the judge himself but by his native officers (Amlahs), whose good will is often secured beforehand by both parties, so that they may not endeavour to detect their false evidence by a strict examination. Under these circumstances the practice of perjury has grown so prevalent that the facts sworn to by the different parties in a suit are generally directly opposed to each other, so that it has become almost impossible to ascertain the truth from their contradictory evidence. 6thly, That the prevalence of perjury has again introduced the practice of forgery to such an extent as to render the administration of justice still more intricate and perplexing. 7thly, The want of due publicity being given to the regulations which stand at present in place of a code of laws. From their being very voluminous and expensive, the community generally have not the means of purchasing them; nor have they a sufficient opportunity of consulting or copying them in the judicial and revenue offices where they are kept. As these are usually at a distance from the populous parts of the town, only professional persons or parties engaged in suits or official business are in the habit of attending these offices. 8thly, and lastly, Holding the proceedings in a language foreign to the judges, as well as to the parties and to the witnesses.

8. Q. In what language are the proceedings of the courts conducted?

A. They are generally conducted in Persian, in imitation of the former Muhammadan rulers, of whom this was the court language.

9. Q. Are the judges, the parties, and the witnesses sufficiently well acquainted with that language to understand the proceedings readily?

A. I have already observed that it is foreign to all these parties. Some of the judges, and a very few among the parties, however, are conversant with that language.

10. Q. Would it be advantageous to substitute the English language in the courts, instead of the Persian?

A. The English language would have the advantage of being the vernacular language of the judges. With regard to the native inhabitants, it would no doubt, in the meantime, have the same disadvantage as the Persian; but its gradual introduction in the courts would still, notwithstanding, prove ultimately beneficial to them by promoting the study of English.

11. Q. Does the native bar assist the judge, and form a check on the accuracy of the decisions?

A. It is no doubt intended to answer this most useful purpose, and does so to some extent; but, from the cause alluded to above

(Ans. 7, No. 3), not to the extent that is necessary to secure the principles of justice.

12. Q. Do the judges treat the native pleaders with the consideration and respect due to their office?

A. They are not always treated in the inferior courts with the consideration due to their office.

13. Q. To what do you attribute it that the bar is not treated with respect?

A. The native pleaders are so unfortunately situated from there being such a great distance between them and the judges who belong to the rulers of the country, and from not being of the same profession, or of the same class as the judges, and having no prospect of promotion as English barristers have, that they are treated as an inferior caste of persons.

14. Q. Do not the native judicial officers employed under the judge assist him in his proceedings?

A. Of course they assist him, and that very materially.

15. Q. What kind of assistance do they render to the judge?

A. They read the proceedings, viz. bill (darkh'ast, or arz), answers, replies, rejoinders, and other papers produced in the court; they write the proceedings and depositions of the witnesses; and very often, on account of the weight of business, the judge employs them to take the depositions of the witnesses; sometimes they make abstracts of the depositions and other long papers, and lay them before the judge for his decision.

16. Q. Are they made responsible with the judge for the proceedings held?

A. They are responsible to the judge, but not to the government or the public.

17. Q. Are not the judges assisted also by Hindu and Muhammedan lawyers, appointed to act as interpreters of the law?

A. They are: learned natives of this description being attached to the courts to give their opinion on the Hindu and Muhammedan law points which may arise in any case.

18. Q. Are natives of the country empowered to decide causes of any description?

A. Yes: there are native Munsifs, or commissioners, for the decision of small debts; and Sudder Ameens who are authorised to try causes under five hundred rupees, whether connected with landed or moveable property.

19. Q. Are they qualified to discharge the duties entrusted to them?

A. Many of them are fully qualified; and if proper care can be taken in the selection, all the situations might be filled with well-qualified persons.

20. Q. What is your opinion of the general character and conduct of the judges in their official capacity as such?

A. I am happy to state that in my humble opinion the judicial branch of the service is at present almost pure; and there are among the judicial servants of the Company gentlemen of such distinguished talents, that from their natural abilities, even without the regular study of the law, they commit very few, if any, errors in the administration of justice. Others are not so well gifted, and must therefore rely more on the representations of their native officers, and being free from any local check on their public conduct, their regularity, attention to business, and other judicial habits, are not equal to the wishes of their employers, nor calculated to give general satisfaction.

21. Q. Do they borrow money to any extent from the natives?

A. Formerly they borrowed to a great amount; at present this practice is discouraged.

22. Q. Why are the natives prevailed upon to lend to the judges, and other civilians, money to such an extent?

A. Natives not having any hope of attaining direct consideration from the Government by their merits or exertions, are sometimes induced to accommodate the civil servants with money, by the hope of securing their patronage for their friends and relatives, the judges and others having many situations directly or indirectly in their gift; sometimes by the hope of benefiting by their friendly disposition when the natives have estates under their jurisdiction; and sometimes to avoid incurring the hostility of the judge, who, by Regulation IX of 1807, is empowered not only to imprison, but inflict corporal punishment, by his own authority under certain legal pretences on any native, whatever his respectability may be.

23. Q. What is your opinion of the judicial character and conduct of the Hindu and Muhammedan lawyers attached to the courts?

A. Among the Muhammadan lawyers I have met with some honest men. The Hindu lawyers are in general not well spoken of, and they do not enjoy much of the confidence of the public.

24. Q. What is your opinion of the official character and conduct of the subordinate native judicial officers?

A. Considering the trifling salaries which they enjoy, from 10, 20, 30, or 40 rupees to 100 rupees a month (the last being the allowance of the head native officer only), and the expenses they must incur, in supporting some respectability of appearance, besides maintaining their families; (the keeping of a palankeen alone must cost the headman a sum of between 20 and 30 rupees per month), and considering also the extent of the power which they must possess, from their situations and duties as above explained (Q. 15.), and the immense sums involved in the issue of causes pending in the courts, it is not to be expected that the native officers, having such trifling salaries, at least many of them, should not avail themselves sometimes of their official influence, to promote their own interests.

25. Q. What is your opinion of the professional character and conduct of the pleaders?

A. Many pleaders of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut are men of the highest respectability and legal knowledge, as the judges are very select in their appointment, and treat them in a way which makes them feel that they have a character to support. Those of the provincial courts of appeal are also generally respectable, and competent to the discharge of their duties. In the Zillah courts some respectable pleaders may also be met with, but proper persons for that office are not always very carefully selected; and in general, I may observe, that the pleaders are held in a state of too much dependence by the judges, particularly in the inferior courts, which must incapacitate them from standing up firmly in support of the rules of the court.

26. Q. Is bribery and corruption ever practised in the judicial department, and to what extent?

A. I have already intimated my opinion in the answer to Questions 20 and 24.

27 and 28. Q. Have the respectable and intelligent native inhabitants generally confidence in the purity of the Company's courts and the accuracy of their decisions: and have the native community confidence in the integrity of the subordinate judicial officers?

A. Whilst such evils exist as I have above noticed, in my reply to Queries 5, 6, and 7, as well as to Queries 20 and 24, the respectable and intelligent native inhabitants cannot be expected to have confidence in the general operation of the judicial system.

29. Q. Are the judges influenced in their decision by their native officers?

A. Those who are not well versed in the native languages, and in the Regulations of government, must necessarily be very much dependent on their native officers, as well as those who dislike to undergo the fatigue and restraint of business, which to Europeans is still more irksome in the sultry climate of India.

30. Q. Can you suggest any mode of removing the several defects you have pointed out in the judicial system?

A. As European judges in India are not generally expected to discharge judicial duties satisfactorily, independent of native assistance, from not possessing a thorough knowledge of the languages, manners, customs, habits, and practices of the people, and as the natives who possess this knowledge have been long accustomed to subordination and indifferent treatment, and consequently have not the power of commanding respect from others, unless joined by Europeans, the only remedy which exists, is to combine the knowledge and experience of the native with the dignity and firmness of the European. This principle has been virtually acted upon and reduced to practice since 1793, though in an imperfect manner, in the constitution of the courts of circuit, in which the Mufti (native assessor) has a voice with the judge in the decision of every cause, having a seat with him on the bench. This arrangement has tolerably well answered the purpose of government, which has not been able to devise a better system in a matter of such importance as the decision of questions of life and death, during the space of forty years though it has been continually altering the systems in other branches. It is my humble opinion, therefore, that the appointment of such native assessors should be reduced to a regular system in the civil courts. They should be appointed by government for life, at the recommendation of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, which should select them carefully, with a view to their character and qualifications, and allow them to hold their situations during life and good behaviour, on a salary of from 300 to 400 rupees per mensem. They should be responsible to the government as well as to the public for their decisions, in the same manner as the European judges, and correspond directly with the judicial secretary. A casting voice should be allowed to the European judge, in appointing the native officers, in case of difference of opinion; the native assessor, however, having a right to record his dissent. These assessors should be selected out of those natives who have been already employed for a period of not less than five years as assessors (Mufti), lawyers (Zillah Court Maulavis), or as the head native officers in the judicial department.*

Par. 2. This measure would remove the evils pointed out in the answers to Q. 5 and to Q. 7, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and also afford a partial remedy to the evils noticed in Nos. 5, 6 and 8 of Answer 7, as well as provide against the evils referred to in answer to Query 24.

Par. 3. In order, however, to render the administration of justice efficient and as perfect as human efforts can make it, and to remove the possibility of any undue influence which a native assessor might attempt to exercise on the bench under a European judge of insufficient capacity, as well as to do away the vexatious delays and grievous suffering attending appeals, it is necessary to have recourse to trial by jury, as being the only effectual check against corruption, which, from the force of inveterate habit, and the contagion of example, has become so notoriously prevalent in India. This measure would be an additional remedy to the evils mentioned in the reply to Query 5 and 7, Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 5, 6, 8, and also in the replies to Query 4, Nos. 2 and 3, as well as in Query 24.

Par. 4. With a view to remove the evils arising from want of publicity of the Regulations, as noticed in No. 7 of Answer to the Query 7, two or three copies in each of the principal native languages used in that part of the country should be kept in a building in the populous quarter of the town, under the charge of a keeper on a small salary, and all persons should be freely admitted to read and copy them at leisure from sunrise to sunset. The expense of this would not amount to two pounds a month for each station, and the benefits of it would be incalculable.

Par. 5. In order to remedy the evils arising from the distance of the courts as noticed at Question 4th Answer No. 1, I beg to suggest as follows: The Sudder Ameens, or superior commissioners for the decision of causes under 500 rupees, affecting moveable or immoveable property, are at present stationed at the same place where the zillah judge holds his court, and complaints are at first laid before the judge, who turns them over to one of these commissioners at his own discretion; consequently they afford no remedy for the great distance of the courts from many under their jurisdiction, as this often embraces a circle of 60 or 80 miles. I therefore propose that these Sudder Ameens should be stationed at proportionate distances in different parts of the district, so that suitors may not have to travel far from their homes to file their bills and afterwards to seek and obtain justice; and that one of the assistants of the judge should be stationed in a central position which might enable him (without any additional charge to government as I shall hereafter show) to visit and personally superintend these Ameens, when the judge's station is on or near the border of his district. If it is otherwise situated, one of the assistants of the judge may remain at the head station with the judge, and superintend the commissioners nearest to him, while another assistant being stationed at an appropriate distance, may superintend those who are more remotely situated from the first assistant. There will thus be as complete a check over them as under the present system, and justice will be brought home to the doors of a great majority of the inhabitants of each district, since causes under 500 rupees are exceedingly numerous in every Zillah or City Court.

Par. 6. These assistants may, at the same time, be very usefully employed in checking the dreadfully increasing crime of forgery, by which the course of justice is now so very much impeded in the judicial courts. Written documents of a diametrically opposite nature are, as is well known, constantly laid before these courts, and serve to confound justice and perplex a conscientious bench. Therefore under the proposed system of assistant judges' courts in two different quarters of a district, I would recommend, as highly necessary and expedient to check materially the practice of forgery, that parties to any deed should be required, in order to render the same valid, to produce it in open court before the nearest assistant judge, within a certain number of days from the time of its execution. This rule should apply* to all sorts of deeds, contracts and agreements regarding property above 100 rupees in value, such as wills and bills of sale, &c., and money bonds for debts payable at a certain period beyond six months, and upon receiving a fee of from one to two rupees, according to its importance, the assistant judge, after ascertaining the identity of the parties in open court, should immediately affix his signature as witness to the deed and retain a copy of the same in a book of record kept on purpose, duly authenticated and marked to prevent the possibility of interpolation, or any other species of fraud. The sum above allowed as a fee on registering, with a small fixed charge per page for retaining a copy, would be more than sufficient to remunerate any extra trouble attending the duty and the labour of transcribing. To induce the proprietors of land and other respectable persons to appear without reluctance in open court on such occasions, they should be invariably treated with the respect due to their rank. Further to encourage the public to have papers registered, and to satisfy the government that no improper delay takes place in registering them, as well as to prevent the copyists from extorting perquisites, a book should be kept in which the party presenting a paper should in open court enter a memorandum of the day and hour on which he presented it for registration, and of the day and hour when it was produced and returned to him. This system would materially remedy the evil referred to in answer to Q. 7, No. 6.

Par. 7. The assistant judges should also receive appeals from the Sudder Ameens, and try them in conjunction with a native assessor appointed by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, on a salary smaller than that of the judges' assessor, that is, perhaps not exceeding 200 rupees a month. In the event of difference of opinion between the assessor and the assistant judge on any case, it should be appealable to the Zillah judge, whose decision should be final; and as the Sudder Ameens are now paid from the duties on the stamp used and the fees received on the papers filed, so the assistant judge's assessor may be paid in the same manner from the fees and stamp imposed on the appeal causes.

Par. 8. The assistant judge, though not empowered to interfere with the police officers of the interior in the discharge of their duties, should notwithstanding be authorised to receive written complaints of any abuse of their power from persons who feel themselves oppressed by the police, and to forward the same to the head magistrate of the district for his investigation; as very often the poor villagers or peasants are oppressed by the local police officers, but despair of any relief, from being unable to leave their homes and travel to a distance to the station to seek redress.

31. Q. Is trial by jury (or any thing resembling it) resorted to at present in any case?

A. The principle of juries under certain modifications has from the most remote periods been well understood in this country under the name of Punchayet.

32. Q. What is the difference between the Jury system and the Punchayet?

A. The Punchayet exists on a very defective plan at present, because the jurors (members of the Punchayet) are not regular in their meetings, have no power to compel the attendance of witnesses, unless by appealing to the court; they have no judge to preside at their meetings and direct their proceedings, and are not guarded in any manner from partiality or private influence. They are in fact at present only arbitrators appointed by the court with consent of the parties in a cause, each party nominating one arbitrator and the judge a third; and sometimes both parties agree to refer the decision of the case to one arbitrator.

33. Q. Why and when was the Punchayet system discouraged?

A. It has not been totally discouraged, but rather placed on a different footing. In former days it was much more important in its functions. It was resorted to by parties at their own option, or by the heads of tribes, who assumed the right of investigation and decision of differences; or by the government, which handed over causes to a Punchayet.

34. Q. Do you really think the introduction of any system of Jury trial or Punchayet would be beneficial?

A. Undoubtedly, as shewn by the 3rd Par. of my answer to Question 30. Since a Punchayet composed of the intelligent and respectable inhabitants, under the direction of a European judge to preserve order, and a native judge to guard against any private influence, is the only tribunal which can estimate properly the whole bearings of a case, with the validity of the documentary evidence, and the character of the witnesses, who could have little chance of imposing false testimony upon such a tribunal.

35. Q. Do you think it would be acceptable to the inhabitants?

A. As the Punchayet even in its present very imperfect form is still practised by the inhabitants, it would without doubt be much more so, were it reduced to a regular system, guarded by proper checks, and dignified by judicial forms, which would inspire the whole community with higher respect and confidence for this ancient institution. But whatever length its popularity may go, it is the only system by which the present abuses consisting of perjury, forgery, and corruption can be removed.

36. Q. Will you explain, in detail, the modification of the Panchayet-jury system which you think best suited to the circumstances of the country?

A. I am of opinion that the Panchayet system should be adopted in conjunction with the plan above stated. (Q. 30.) It would be easy to adapt it to the object in view, without imposing any heavy duty on the respectable portion of the native community. Three jurymen, or at most five, would, I conceive, answer the purpose as well as a greater number, and any zillah (district) could easily supply a list from which these might be taken without inconvenience. Three times the number required for sitting on a trial should be summoned, and the persons actually to serve should be taken by lot, so that neither the judges nor the parties may be able to know beforehand what persons will sit on the trial of a cause. The general list of jurymen should be as numerous as the circumstances of the city or zillah (district) will admit. It should be prepared by the European judge at the station, and altered and amended by him from time to time as may seem proper and requisite. He may easily select well qualified juries from respectable and intelligent natives known to be versed in judicial subjects, who reside in considerable numbers at every station. A necessary concomitant to the introduction of jurymen will be the sole use of the vernacular dialect of the place to the exclusion of the Persian language in proceedings. Publicity should be as much fostered as possible, and the jury should be kept apart and required to decide without separating, as in the English courts of law. In a trial thus conducted the resort to appeal will cease to be useful, and for the purposes of justice, need only be allowed where there is a difference of opinion betwixt the bench and the jury. For, where judge and jury are unanimous, an appeal would be more likely to produce injustice by vexatious expense and delay, than to rectify error on the part of the inferior court, and ought therefore to be prohibited.

37. Q. Do you think the natives of the country qualified to discharge judicial functions of this nature, and from what class would you select the jurors?

A. They are assuredly qualified, as I observed before, in answer to Query 19, and the jurors at present may be judiciously selected from retired pleaders (wakils) and retired judicial officers, from agents employed by private individuals to attend the court (mukhtars) who are generally well qualified, and from the other intelligent and respectable inhabitants as above observed (Answer to Q. 30 and 31.) To avoid any undue bias or partiality, both parties in a suit should have a right of objecting to any jurymen, who can be shewn to have an interest in the cause, or particular connection with either party.

38. Q. Do you think the natives competent and eligible to all judicial situations, or only subordinate ones?

A. As many of them, even under the present manifold disadvantages, already discharge all the judicial functions, even the most arduous (see Q. 15.), it will not be very difficult, I think, with proper management, to find qualified persons amongst the natives for any duty that may be assigned to them. Many, however, as in other countries, are only fit for subordinate situations.

39. Q. What advantage do you conceive this Panchayet-jury system would possess over the judicial system now established?

A. First, from the thorough knowledge of the native character possessed by such a tribunal, and of the language of the parties and witnesses, it would not be so liable to error in its decision. Secondly, the jury would be guarded from undue influence by the judge and his assessors. Thirdly, it would guard the assessor from the use of undue influence. Fourthly, it would secure the dispatch of business, and the prevention of delay, and of the need of appeals. The checking of perjury and forgery may also reasonably be hoped from it, besides many other advantages already pointed out.

40. Q. Are the provincial courts of appeal conducted on the same principles as the district courts to which you have referred?

A. As they are presided over by gentlemen of more experience and longer residence in the country, these courts are generally conducted with greater regularity.

41. Q. What is the nature of the difference existing between them?

A. Under the Bengal Presidency, in causes above 10,000 rupees, the action must be laid in the provincial court of appeal, and may be decided by one judge. This court takes cognizance also of any case of inferior amount below 10,000 rupees, which may be carried to it by appeal from the decision of or proceedings held by, the judge of the city or district court, and from these provincial appeal courts, appeals can only be made to the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, the highest civil tribunal.

42. Q. Can you point out any defects in the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, and their remedies?

A. Government has always been very careful in its selection of judges for the Sudder Dewany Adawlut, both as regards their ability and integrity; and they are fully competent to remove any defects which may exist in the court over which they preside. It is, however, highly desirable that judges of the Sudder Dewany Adawlut should have the power of issuing the writ of habeas corpus, on seeing sufficient grounds for the exercise of this peculiar power, according to the practice of the English courts. But when the person imprisoned is situated at a greater distance from the Sudder courts than fifty miles, the judges of this court, to save useless expense, might direct one of the circuit judges, on whom they could best rely, to investigate the case, and report to them.

43. Q. What other duties are assigned to the judges of the provincial courts?

A. They are a medium of communication between the Sudder Dewany Adawlut and the inferior courts, and are also judges of circuit.

44. Q. How many provincial courts are there?

A. There are six provincial courts in the provinces attached to the Bengal Presidency, viz., that of Calcutta, Dhacca, Moorshedabad, Patna, Benares, and Bareilly.

45. Q. Are not the judges of the provincial courts still judges of circuit?

A. No: they were so formerly; but about two years ago the local government transferred the duties of judges of circuit from them to the revenue commissioners.

46. Q. Does any inconvenience arise from making the revenue commissioners also judges of circuit?

A. Such an union of offices is quite incompatible and injurious. The judge of circuit discharges duties of the highest importance, being invested with the power of life and death, and imprisonment during life in chains, the infliction of corporal punishment, and the confiscation of property. He is, besides, charged with the preservation of peace and good order in several extensive districts ; and it is morally impossible, therefore, that he can fulfil the expectation of Government and the public, if his attention be at the same time engrossed and distracted by political, commercial, or revenue transactions. In criminal suits, moreover, he labours under a peculiar disadvantage, not being assisted by a bar composed of persons of liberal education, or by a body of honest, intelligent and independent jurors. The former often proves of essential service to the bench in the king's court, by able expositions of the law as applicable to every case, by great acuteness in cross-examining witnesses, and in the detection of false evidence ; while the importance of the jury is universally acknowledged.

Par. 2. Formerly, when the judges of the provincial courts of appeal did the duties of the circuit, one or two of them used to remain at the station, to attend to the necessary current business, while the others, (one, or sometimes two) were on circuit. But on the present system, the commissioner of revenue being also judge of circuit, when he goes on circuit, all references to him, by the collectors under his jurisdiction, often remain unanswered, and the most important matters in the revenue business are entirely suspended for months together. Although the former Moham-medan governments were subject to the charge of indifference about the administration of justice, they yet perceived the evils liable to arise from an union of revenue and judicial duties. No judge or judicial officer empowered to try capital crimes (as Cazees or Muftis), was ever suffered to become a collector of revenue.

Par. 3. The separation of these two offices has also been established by long practice under the British government, being one of the leading principles of the system introduced by Lord Cornwallis. Accordingly those young civilians who attached themselves to the revenue line of the service, have advanced by successive steps in that line ; while those again who preferred the judicial, have been in like manner continued and promoted through the different grades in that department of public duty. Therefore, by overturning this system, a gentleman may now be appointed to discharge the highest judicial duties, who never before tried the most trivial cause ; and another to superintend the collectors of revenue, to whose duties he has been all his life a stranger. Mr. E. R. Barwell, Revenue Commissioner and Judge of Circuit of the 24-Pargunnahs, Baraset, Jessore and Burrisal, is an example of the former case; and Mr. H. Braddon, Revenue Commissioner and Judge of Circuit of Burdwan, Jungul Muhal, and Hooghly, is an instance of the latter.*

Par. 4. The remedy I beg to propose, without further expense attending the establishment, is to separate the duties between two distinct sets of officers, and double the jurisdiction of each. By this arrangement each gentleman discharging one class of duties would find them more easy and simple, though the field embraced was more extensive, and the expense would be the same as under the present system.

Par. 5. The duties of judges and magistrates are not so incompatible as those of the judges of circuit and the commissioners of revenue; but still separation of these duties is advisable on account of the great weight of the business in the Zillah and city courts. Therefore these two offices (the office of judge and that of magistrate) should be exercised by different individuals. However, the magistrates should assist the judges in the execution of their decrees or orders as they have hitherto done in those districts where the offices of judge and magistrate are separate.

47. Q. What delay generally takes place in the decision of causes?

A. In the Zillah courts a cause may be pending on an average about two or three years; in the courts of appeal four or five years; and in the Sudder Dewany Adawlut the same period. But if the property in dispute amount to the value of about 50,000 rupees, so as to admit of an appeal to the king in council, the probable period of delay in the decision of such an appeal is better known to the authorities here than to myself.

48. Q. What is the cause of such delay?

A. It must be acknowledged that irregularity in attending the discharge of the judicial duties, and the want of proper discipline or control over the judicial officers are the main causes of obstruction in the dispatch of the judicial business; and these daily growing evils in every branch of the judicial establishment have, in a great measure, defeated the object which the government had in view in establishing it. For example, a bill of complaint written on stamp, the first paper in a suit, cannot easily be got on the file unless it be accompanied with some perquisite to the native recorder, whose duty it is to ascertain, first, whether the sum in dispute correspond with the value of the stamp, an act which may be accomplished in a minute or a week, just as it suits the inclination of the examiner. The case is the same with respect to the issuing of the summonses prepared by another native officer, to command the attendance of the person sued, either in person or by a pleader to put in his answer. Summonses, subpoenas, and the processes of the provincial courts are issued against individuals through the judge of the district in which they reside, and a certain period is always allowed for serving these processes; but neither are the Zillah judges, whose time is otherwise fully occupied, punctual in observing those subordinate duties, nor does the higher court, which is occupied by other important business, take any early notice of the expiration of the time allowed for making the return. The parties are therefore obliged to cultivate a friendly understanding not only with the officers of the provincial court, but also with those of the Zillah or city court. Whether the defendant attends immediately or long after the time allowed him, or whether he files his answer within the regular prescribed period, or a year afterwards, is treated as if practically immaterial. But delay unintentionally allowed to the parties in filling the requisite papers and in producing their documents and witnesses, is the too frequent source of great abuses; as the opportunity thus afforded by delay is embraced to invent stories and forge documents in support of them, to procure false witnesses and to instruct them in the manner that appears best calculated to serve the purposes in view.

Par. 2. Moreover, some of the judges are very irregular in calling on causes, choosing any day and any time that suits their convenience to occupy the bench singly. The pleaders, being natives of the country, have little or no influence over the conduct of the judges to prevent such irregularities, and dare not hint dissatisfaction.

Par. 3. I would suggest, with a view to remove irregularities originating in a want of official control, without disregard to economy, that the head writer in each court be required to discharge this duty with some extra remuneration for the same, and be made strictly responsible under an adequate penalty, with proper sureties for his conduct, liable, jointly with him, for any fine he may incur, by want of punctuality proved against him by either party, on complaint to the judge of the court, or of a superior court, or to the judicial secretary.

Par. 4. This superintendent or clerk of the papers should be required to place on the file in open court bills of complaint as well as answers and replies, &c., within the period prescribed in Regulation IV of 1793. These should not be admitted to the records after the time allowed, unless the judge, on motion publicly made, find sufficient reason for prolonging the period, say a week or two in particular cases.

Par. 5. The clerk of the papers should vigilantly watch that no delay takes place in issuing summonses, subpoenas, and other process of the court; and that the day on which these are ordered to be issued, and the day on which their return is expected should be correctly registered in a separate book kept on purpose.

Par. 6. In case of neglect or wilful disobedience, the superintendent of the papers should immediately submit the circumstance to the notice of the judge. Should the neglect be on the part of the prosecutor, the judge ought immediately to pronounce nonsuit, and if on the part of the defendant, proceed ex parte without allowing the neglect to be remedied. Or if the judge do not attend to these rules, the clerk of the papers should be bound to report the circumstance to the superior court, or the judicial secretary on pain of forfeiting his situation. A separate register of the returns should also be kept, as well as a register shewing the time when the defendant's answer must be filed—say one month from the day when the summonses are served, as is the case with equity suits in Calcutta; also shewing the hours during which the judge may attend on public duty, and likewise his occasional absence from court with the alleged cause thereof. The superintendent should transmit monthly a copy of each register, with his own remarks, to government through the secretary in the judicial department, for its particular attention to every breach of regularity therein mentioned.

Par. 7. With a view to the same end, every person who chooses should have a right to be present during the trial of causes in any court: the courts, as is generally the case at present, should be so constructed as to afford facilities for a considerable number of persons hearing and witnessing the whole proceedings: any one who chose should be entitled to make notes of the same and publish them, or cause them to be published, in any manner he may think proper for general information, subject to prosecution for intentional error or misrepresentation that might be judicially proved against him before a competent tribunal, and to incur such penalty as it might award. This measure would tend to remove the evil pointed out in answer to Query 7, No. 4.

49. Q. What number of causes may be pending at one time, and undisposed of in the district courts and courts of appeal?

A. This depends partly on the comparative degree of industry and attention to business bestowed by the judicial officers, partly on the extent of the district, and amount of business within the jurisdiction of the respective courts. However the average number of causes pending may be ascertained by a reference to the registers kept, which are not at present accessible to me. My impression is that in some districts they are very numerous. But to shew how much the vigilance and activity of a public officer may accomplish, even in so extensive a district as Hooghly, I may mention that there, under Mr. D. C. Smith, every case is decided in the course of four, five or six months. In the courts of appeal the causes pending are very numerous. Conscientious and active as Mr. Smith is, he is often obliged, from the pressure of business, judicial and magisterial, to authorise his native judicial officers to take the depositions of witnesses in the civil suits.

50. Q. Could the number of appeal cases be reduced without any disadvantage?

A. Yes, certainly not only without disadvantage but with great positive advantage. 1st, By introducing a more regular system of filing papers and bringing on causes, as above suggested, in answer to Q. 48. 2nd, By the aid of a jury and joint native judge, as proposed in reply to Q. 30. 3rd, By allowing of no appeal unless when there is a difference of opinion in the zillah or city court in giving sentence, as noticed in reply to the Query 36. By these means the business would be at once conducted with more accuracy; so many litigious suits would not occur; and there would be very little need of appeals to revise the decisions.

51. Q. Has the right of appeal to the King in Council proved beneficial or otherwise?

A. Owing to the vast distance, the heavy expense, and the very great delay which an appeal to England necessarily involves, owing also to the inaccuracies in the translations of the papers prepared after decision and sent to this country, and to other causes, I think the right of appeal to the king in council is a great source of evil and must continue to be so, unless a specific court of appeal be created here expressly for Indian appeal causes above 10,000*l*. At the same time to remove the inaccuracies above noticed, three qualified persons (a European, a Mussalman, and a Hindu) should be nominated joint translators, and the translations should be furnished within one year from the conclusion of the proceedings in India, and both parties should be allowed to examine the accuracy of the translations thus prepared.* But if the appellant neglect to pay the fees of translation within two months after the decision, the appeal should be quashed.

52. Q. What is the nature of the duties assigned to the revenue commissioners?

A. They exercise a general superintendence and control over the revenue collectors, with powers similar to those vested in the board at Calcutta, formerly called the board of revenue, and in the board of commissioners for the upper provinces. That board at Calcutta is now the superior authority to which an appeal may be made from the decisions of the present commissioners, (it is in consequence now generally termed the Sudder or supreme board), and thence to the government itself. In other words the office of commissioner is a substitute for the board of revenue, but an appeal being allowed from the one to the other, of course there is abundance of appeals, and a great part of the business is thus transacted twice or thrice over.

53. Q. What is the nature of the duties assigned to them as judges of the circuit?

A. As judges of circuit they exercise control over the magistrates and try the higher classes of criminal causes, which involve a question of life or death, or to the Sudder Nizamut Adawlat, the highest criminal tribunal.

54. Q. Does not the discharge of one class of duties interfere with the discharge of another class, which seems to be of a very different nature?

* In noticing this circumstance, I by no means intend to make the least insinuation to the prejudice of the present translators: but make the statement from my own observation of various translations, and my own experience of the great difficulty or rather impracticability, of rendering accurately large masses of documents from an oriental tongue, and frequently a provincial dialect, into a European language, of which the idioms are so widely different, unless the translator be assisted by persons possessing peculiar vernacular knowledge of the various localities.

A. As above noticed (Ans. to Q. 46), while they are engaged in the duties of their circuit court, the reports and references from the revenue collectors must remain for several months unanswered; and not only do the people suffer in consequence, but the public business stagnates, as already observed.

55 and 56. Q. What is the nature of the functions of the judge of circuit, and his native law assessor? Do they afford each other reciprocal assistance in the discharge of their duties?

A. Both take cognizance of the charges brought before the magistrates and sent to their court; both hear the evidence and examine the witnesses, and both give their voice in passing the decision, as I observed in Par. 1st, of my Ans. to Q. 30. In a vague sense the Mohammedan law assessor may be considered as analagous to the jury in English courts, while the European judicial officer is the judge.

57. Q. Are the judges generally competent to the discharge of their duties?

A. Some of them are highly qualified; but it is not expected that European judges should be generally competent to determine difficult questions of evidence among a people whose language, feelings, and habits of thinking and acting are so totally different from their own.

58. Q. Are the native law assessors generally competent?

A. They are generally so: some of the Muftis (Mussulman law assessors) are men of such high honour and integrity, that they may be entrusted with the power of a jury with perfect safety; and they are all of the most essential utility, and indeed the main instrument for expediting the business of the criminal courts. However highly or moderately qualified the European judges may have been, the business has been advantageously conducted through the assistance and co-operation of these Mohammedan assessors for a period of 40 years past.

59. Q. If they should differ in opinion, what course is adopted?

A. The case is then referred to the Nizamut Adawlat (the highest criminal tribunal).

60. Q. What course do the judges of the Nizamut Adawlat adopt?

A. If the judge of the supreme criminal court, before whom the referred case comes, should, after consulting with the Muftis of that court, concur in the opinion of the circuit judge, his decision is confirmed and carried into execution. But should the Sudder Nizamut (supreme criminal) judge differ from the opinion of the circuit judge, the case is then submitted to a second, or if necessary, to a third Sudder Nizamut judge, and the opinion given by two Sudder judges against one, is final.

61. Q. Are the judges of the supreme criminal court also judges of the highest civil court?

A. Yes; and very deservedly.

62. Q. Are they generally competent to the discharge of their duties?

A. I have already observed (Q. 42.) that they are highly competent.

63. Q. As it is of the highest importance that the courts of circuit should be above all corruption; can you suggest any means of improving them?

A. Courts which have the disposal of life and death are undoubtedly of very high importance; and I would therefore propose instead of only one law assessor (who stands in place of a jury) that three or five (at least three) law assessors should be attached to each court, while trials are going on.

64. Q. From what class of men would you select the juries in the criminal courts?

A. The criminal law now established in India has been very judiciously founded on the Mohammedan criminal law. It has however been so greatly modified by the acts of government from time to time since 1793, that it, in fact, constitutes a new system of law, consisting partly of its original basis, and partly of the government regulations. But it has been made a regular study only by the respectable Mohammedans, who, when they attain a certain proficiency, are styled Maulvies, a term equivalent to Doctors of Law. Formerly two of these were attached to each court of circuit, and one to each district court. Of late the office of Maulvi of circuit having been abolished, the Maulvi or Mufti of the Zillah (district) court has been ordered by government to officiate as Mufti of circuit, while the judge of circuit is engaged in the trial of the criminal causes of that district. Thus he alone, as assessor of the judge of circuit, is entrusted with the powers usually assigned to a jury in a British court; having the power of delivering his opinion on every case at the close of the trial.

Par. 2. With a view to lessen the abuse of the great power thus given, it is highly desirable that government should adopt the following precaution : The judge of circuit previous to his departure for any Zillah (district) or city to try criminal causes, should summon, through the magistrate, one or two additional Maulvis attached to the adjacent courts, with a few other learned, intelligent and respectable inhabitants of that district or city, to join him on his arrival with a moderate extra allowance for their services, and every morning before he takes his seat on the bench, the judge should, without previous intimation, direct three of them to sit with him during the whole trials that may come on for that day as his law assessors and they should be required to deliver their opinions in each case in open court, immediately after the close of the proceedings, without previous opportunity of communicating with any one whatever, on the same principle as an English jury : and the judge should immediately inform the parties of the verdict, to put an end to all intrigues. The judge of circuit should also be required to keep a vigilant watch over the proceedings of the magistrates within his jurisdiction, and to institute an investigation personally and on the spot, into any complaint preferred against them, whenever he sees sufficient ground for adopting this prompt measure ; and the judge of circuit only should have the power of inflicting corporal punishment ; not any magistrate as injudiciously authorised by Regulation IX of 1807, Sec. 19th.

65. Q. What would be their duty ? Precisely like that of a jury, or like that of the law assessors as hitherto employed ?

A. More resembling that of the law assessors as hitherto employed. The difference between them is not important, and the result would be the same.

66. Q. Should not the jury be selected from persons of all religious sects and divisions ?

A. Since the criminal law has hitherto been administered by the Mohammedans ; to conciliate this class, the assessors should still be selected from among them, until the other classes may have acquired the same qualifications, and the Mohammedans may become reconciled to co-operate with them.

67. Q. Do you think any alteration necessary in the system of criminal law now established ?

A. As the criminal laws now established are already in general very familiar to the natives, I think they may better remain in their present state, until the government may be able to introduce a regular code.

68. Q. In what manner do you think a code of criminal law could be framed suitable to the wants of the country?

A. A code of criminal law for India should be founded as far as possible on those principles which are common to, and acknowledged by all the different sects and tribes inhabiting the country. It ought to be simple in its principles, clear in its arrangement, and precise in its definitions; so that it may be established as a standard of criminal justice in itself, and not stand in need of explanation by a reference to any other books of authority, either Mohammedan or Christian. It is a subject of general complaint that persons of a certain high rank, however profligate some of them may be, are, from political considerations, exempted from the jurisdiction or control of the courts of the law. To remedy this inconvenience, in the proposed code, so as to give general satisfaction, without disregarding the political distinctions hitherto observed, it may perhaps be expedient for government to order such persons to be tried by a special commission, composed of three or more persons of the same rank. This very regulation, when once known to them, would, in all probability, deter them from committing any very gross act of tyranny or outrage upon their dependants or others.

69. Q. What period of time would it take to frame such a code, and by whom could it be done satisfactorily?

A. It must require at least a couple of years to do it justice; and it ought to be drawn up by persons, thoroughly acquainted with Mohammedan and Hindu law, as well as the general principles of British law.

70. Q. Are the judges capable of regulating their proceedings by such a code of laws?

A. At present they are not generally capable of performing their judicial duties independent of the aid of the assessors; but with a proper code, as above supposed, they might, most of them, in no great period, by making it a regular study, become much more capable of administering justice by it than they are by the present system.

71, 72. Q. Would not the detention of the young civilians in England to obtain a regular legal education be injurious by delaying their proceeding to India for several years, at that period of life, when they are best capable to acquire the native languages? Do you conceive that any disadvantages arise from civilians going out at an early age?

distributing them, at prime cost, in the current languages of the people, they might render the rights of property secure; since, these being clear and well-known to the whole community, it would be impossible for any designing man to induce an intelligent person to enter upon litigious suits. The law of inheritance should, of course, remain as at present with modifications peculiar to the different sects, until by the diffusion of intelligence the whole community may be prepared to adopt one uniform system. At present when a new regulation, drawn up by any officer of government and submitted to it, is approved of, it immediately becomes law when promulgated, the same as an act of parliament in this country, when approved of, discussed, and sanctioned by king, lords and commons. From the want of sufficient local knowledge and experience on the part of the framers of such regulations, they are often found not to answer in practice, and the local government is thus frequently obliged to rescind the whole or part of them. I would therefore suggest that if any new regulation be thought necessary before the completion of the civil and criminal codes above proposed, great care and precaution should be observed in its enactment. With this view every such project of law before it is finally adopted by the government, should be printed and a copy sent directly from Government, not only to the judges of the Sudder Dewany Adawlat, and the members of the Board of Revenue, &c., but also to the advocate-general on the part of the Honourable Company, to the principal Zamindars, such as the Rajahs of Burdwan, Behar, Benares, &c., and to the highly respectable merchants such as Jagat Set at Marsehadabad, Bahoo Baijnath at Patna, and the representatives of Bahoo Manohar Dass at Benares, also to the Muftis of the Sudder Dewany Adawlat, and the head native officers of the Boards of Revenue, for their opinion on each clause of the Regulation to be sent in writing within a certain period. Because these being the persons who are affected by the Regulations, they will be cautious of recommending any that is injurious.* It should still be optional, however, with government to be guided or not by their suggestions. But a copy of the minutes made by the different parties abovenamed should accompany the Regulations, when these are to be transmitted to England for the consideration of the court of directors, and parliament; and there should be a standing committee of the House of Commons, to take the whole regulations and minutes into consideration, and report to the House from time to time on the subject, for their confirmation or amendment.

In such matters as those of war and peace, it may be necessary that the local government should act on its own discretion and responsibility according to existing circumstances, notwithstanding the opinion of the government in England. But as the affairs of India have been known to the authorities in Europe, for such a series of years, in matters of legislation, the local government should be bound to carry into effect any regulations or order in judicial and revenue matters sent out, formally enacted by the British government, or the Court of Directors under the express sanction of the Board of Commissioners for the control of the affairs of India, although the local Government might still remonstrate against them to the home authorities.

The attention thus shewn by the government at home and abroad, to the feelings and interests of the Zamindars, and merchants, as principal members of the community, though it would not confer upon them any political power, would give them an interest in the government, and inspire them with greater attachment to it, and also the whole community, as being under their influence, and in general receiving its opinions from them.

77. Q. Should the civil servants, in the judicial and revenue departments, be educated expressly for the particular line of the service in which they are engaged, or is it advantageous to transfer them from one branch of it to another?

A. It is found by experience that persons, by long habit in the performance of any particular duties, become not only more dexterous in but more reconciled and even attached to them, and find them less irksome than others to which they have not been accustomed. In my humble opinion, the duties of a judge are not inferior in difficulty to those of any other profession whatever, nor is the qualification requisite for them to be acquired with less experience. It has been alleged that the revenue officers, when converted into judicial officers, must be better judges of revenue causes. But on this principle, commercial officers ought to become judges for the sake of commercial causes, agriculturists for agricultural causes, and mechanists for mechanical disputes. However, as matters of revenue, commerce, agriculture, &c., are decided on the general principles of law and justice, any such special preparation has never been found necessary : therefore these two classes of duties should be kept quite distinct, if it is wished that either of them be performed well.

78. Q. Can you offer any other suggestions for the improvement of the Judicial Establishment ?

A. 1st. In order to keep the judicial officers above temptation, their salaries should not be reduced. 2ndly. With the additional aids and checks of joint native judges, assessors, and juries above proposed, (Ans. to Q. 30.) all civil courts of appeal may be dispensed with except the supreme civil court (Sudder Dewany Adawlat), and thus a very considerable saving may be effected by the government. One-tenth of this saving will suffice to support all the native assessors, juries, &c., above recommended (Q. 30). 3rdly, By gradually introducing the natives into the revenue departments under the superintendence of European officers, (as I proposed in my Appendix A. on the revenue system), and in the judicial department in co-operation with them, the natives may become attached to the present system of government, so that it may become consolidated, and maintain itself by the influence of the intelligent and respectable classes of the inhabitants, and by the general good will of the people, and not any longer stand isolated in the midst of its subjects, supporting itself merely by the exertion of superior force.

Par 2. Should the gradual introduction of the natives into places of authority and trust as proposed, be found, not to answer the expectations of Government, it would then have the power of stopping their further advancement, or even of reversing what might have been already done in their favour. On the contrary, should the proposed plan of combining Native with European officers have the effect of improving the condition of the inhabitants and of stimulating them with an ambition to deserve the confidence of the government, it will then be enabled to form a judgment of the practicability and expediency of advancing natives of respectability and talent to still higher stations of trust and dignity in the state, either in conjunction with or separately from their British fellow subjects.

Par. 3. In conclusion, I deem it proper to state, that in preparing my replies to these queries, I have not been biassed by the opinions of any individual whatsoever ; nor have I consulted with any person or even referred to any work which treats on the subject of India. I have for the facts consulted only my own recollections ; and in regard to the opinions expressed, I have been guided only by my conscience, and by the impressions left on my mind by long experience and reflection. In the improvements which I have ventured to suggest, I have kept in view equally the interests of the governors and the governed; and without losing sight of a just regard to economy, I have been actuated by a desire to see the administration of justice in India placed on a solid and permanent foundation.

ON THE

REVENUE SYSTEM OF INDIA.

1. Question. By what tenure is land held in the provinces with which you are acquainted?

Answer. In the provinces of Bengal, Behar, and part of Orissa (Midnapoor), land is now held by a class of persons called Zamindars i. e. landholders, who are entitled to perpetual hereditary possession, on condition of paying to government a certain revenue, fixed on their respective lands. This is termed the Zamindary system. But in the ceded and conquered provinces belonging to the Presidency of Fort William, no fixed agreement has yet been made with the Zamindars as to the amount of assessment. Consequently their states are not in their own hands, but under the immediate management of government, and subject to fresh assessments from time to time at its discretion.

In the Madras Presidency, the revenue is for the greater part, collected directly from the cultivators (called Ryots), by the government revenue officers, according to the rate fixed on the different descriptions of land in various situations. These cultivators may retain possession as long as they pay the revenue demanded from them.

2. Q. By what tenure was land held under the former government?

A. Under the Mohammedan government, lands were held by hereditary right on the Zamindary system (though the revenue was sometimes arbitrarily increased); and the Zamindars were considered as having a right to their respective estates, so long as they paid the public revenue. They were at the same time responsible for any breach of the peace committed within the limits of their estates. In this manner many estates, some of which can yet be referred to, such as Vishnupoor, Nuddea, &c., continued in the same family for several centuries.

3. Q. Do persons of all religious sects hold by the same tenure?

A. No religious or other distinctions were observed under the former government in regard to the holding of land; at present, Europeans are interdicted by law from becoming proprietors of land, except within the jurisdiction of the British courts of law at the three presidencies, Calcutta, Madras and Bombay.

4. Q. Are the estates most usually large or small?

A. In the Bengal presidency the estates are many of them considerable, and there are many others of various smaller dimensions; but in the Madras presidency, where the revenue is collected directly from the cultivators, the district is generally divided into small farms.

5. Q. Do the proprietors cultivate their own estates, or let them to tenants?

A. To the best of my knowledge, almost all the land in the Bengal presidency is let out by the proprietors in farms, on a larger or smaller scale.

6. Q. On what terms are the farms rented?

A. The farms are frequently rented by the Zamindar himself to cultivators, often on lease, for payment of a certain fixed rent, and frequently the Zamindar lets the whole, or a great part of his Zamindari to respectable individuals, who realize the rents from the cultivators according to the contracts previously made with them by the Zamindars, or subsequently by these middlemen.

7. Q. Does the ordinary rate of rent seem to press severely on the tenants?

A. It is considered in theory that the cultivator pays half the produce to the landholder, out of which half, 10-11ths or 9-10ths constitute the revenue paid to Government, and 1-10th or 1-11th the net rent of the landholder. This half of the produce is a very heavy demand upon the cultivator, after he has borne the whole expense of seed and labour; but in practice, under the permanent settlement since 1793, the landholders have adopted every measure to raise the rents by means of the power put into their hands.

8. Q. Under the former government had the cultivator any right in the soil to cultivate in perpetuity on paying a fixed rent not subject to be increased?

A. In former times Khud-Kasht Ryots (i. e. cultivators of the lands of their own village) were considered as having an absolute right to continue the possession of their lands in perpetuity on payment of a certain fixed rent, not liable to be increased. But under an arbitrary government, without any regular administration of justice, their acknowledged rights were often trampled upon. From a reference to the laws and the histories of the country, I believe that lands in India were individual property in ancient times. The right of property seems, however, to have been violated by the Mohammedan conquerors in practice; and when the British power succeeded that of the Mohammedans, the former naturally adopted and followed up the system which was found to be in force, and they established it both in theory and practice.

9. Q. Are the tenants now subjected to frequent increase of rent?

A. At the time when the permanent settlement was fixed in Bengal (1793), government recognized the Zamindars (landholders) as having alone an unqualified proprietary right in the soil, but no such rights as belonging to the cultivators (Ryots). (Vide Regs. I and VIII of 1793, the foundation of the perpetual settlement.) But by Art. 2, S. 60 of Reg. VIII of 1793, government declared, that no one should cancel the Pattahs (i. e., the title deeds), fixing the rates of payments for the lands of the Khud-Kasht Ryots (peasants cultivating the lands of their own village), "except upon proof that they had been obtained by collusion," or "that the rents paid by them within the last three years had been below the Nirkh-bundee (general rate) of the Purgannah," (particular part of the district where the land is situated) or "that they had obtained collusive deductions," or "upon a general measurement of the Purgannah for the purpose of equalizing and correcting the assessment." In practice, however, under one or other of the preceding four conditions, the landholders (Zamindars), through their local influence and intrigues, easily succeeded in completely setting aside the rights, even of the Khud-Kasht cultivators, and increased their rents.

10. Q. In what manner was the revenue assessed by Government upon each estate, and upon what principle at the time of the permanent settlement?

A. In the province of Bengal at the time of the permanent settlement, (in 1793) the amount of the revenue which had been paid on each estate (Zamindari) in the preceding year was taken as a standard of assessment, subject to certain modifications. Estates (Taaluks) which had paid a revenue directly to Government for the twelve years previous without fluctuation, were to be assessed at that rate, and the principle of that assessment was considered to be nearly one-half of the gross produce. In Behar and other places the gross amount of the rents arising from an estate was fixed upon as the rate of government assessment, allowing, however, a deduction of ten per cent. to the landholder (Zamindar), in the name of proprietor's dues (Malikanah), and also something for the expense of collecting the rents, &c. In the upper provinces attached to the Bengal presidency, as before observed, no settlement has yet been concluded with the Zamindars (landholders). The estates (Zamindaris) are sometimes let out by government to the highest bidder, to farmers of revenue on leases of a few years, and in other cases the rents are collected from the cultivators by the government officers.

11. Q. On what principle do the proprietors of land regulate the rate of rent paid by the tenants?

A. The different fields or plots of ground on an estate are classed into 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th quality, and certain rates per bigah (a well-known land measure in India) are affixed to them respectively, agreeable to the established rates in the district. These rates are considered as a standard in settling the rent to be paid by the cultivators. But as the precise quality of land is always liable to dispute, and fields may be classed in the first, second, third, or fourth quality according to the discretion of the Zamindars or government surveyors, and the measurement is also liable to variation through the ignorance, ill-will, or intentional errors of the measurers—there is in practice no fixed standard to afford security to the cultivators for the rate or amount of rent demandable from them, although such a standard is laid down in theory.

12. Q. Is the rent any specific proportion of the gross produce of the land?

A. In theory the rent is estimated, as I before observed, at half the gross produce of the land; it is often increased however much beyond that amount by various means; but in places peculiarly subject to have the crops destroyed by sudden inundation, or any other casualty, villagers cultivate generally on condition of receiving half the gross produce and delivering the other half to the landlord (Zamindar).

13. Q. Is the rent paid in money, in agricultural produce, or in labour?
